Our Entire Loss Officially Reported at about Three Thousand.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCH.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Nov. 28.

An official statement of our losses in the recent battles in Chattanooga was received here this morning. Our casualties in killed and wounded on the 23d, 24th and 25th, were but little over three thousand at the storming of Lookout Mountain, and at the small upon Missionary Ridge about two hundred.

The report of our losses on the 26th is not yet received.

Our wounded are all under cover and well cared for. Hospital and all other supplies are abundant.

REPLIES OFFICIAL DISPATCH.

CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE, Nov. 26, 1863.

Hon. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

SIR: On the 23d instant, at 11½ A. M., Gen. GRANT ordered a demonstration against Mission Ridge, to develop the force holding it. The troops marched out, formed in order, and advanced in line of battle, as if on parade.

The rebels watched the formation and movement from their picket lines and rifle-pits, and from the summits of Mission Ridge, five hundred feet above us, and thought it was a review and drill, so openly and deliberately, so regular, was it all done.

The line advanced, preceded by skirmishers, and at 3 o'clock P.M. reached our picket lines and opened a rolling volley upon the rebel pickets, who replied and ran into their advanced line of rifle-pits. After them went our skirmishers and into them, along the centre of the line of 25,000 troops which Gen. THOMAS had so quickly displayed, until we opened fire.

Prisoners assert that they thought the whole movement was a review and general drill, and that it was too late to send to their camps for reinforcements, and that they were overwhelmed by force of numbers. It was a surprise in open daylight.

At 3 P. M., the important advanced position of Orchard Knob and the lines right and left were in our possession, and arrangements were ordered for holding them during the night. The next day, at daylight, Gen. THOMAS had 5,000 men across the Tennessee, and intrenched on its south bank, and commenced the construction of a pontoon bridge about six miles above Chattanooga.

The rebel steamer Dunker was required at the right moment, and contained effective aid in this crossing, carrying over six thousand men. By night-fall, Gen. THOMAS had seized the extremity of Missionary Ridge nearest the river, and was entrenching himself. Gen. HOWARD, with a brigade, opened communication with him from Chattanooga, on the south side of the river. Skirmishing and cannonading continued all day on the left and centre. Gen. HOOKER scaled the slopes of Lookout Mountain, and from the valley of Lookout Creek drove the rebels around the point. He captured some two thousand prisoners, and established himself high up the mountain side, in full view of Chattanooga. This raised the blockade, and new steamers were ordered from Bridgeport to Chattanooga. They had run only to Kelly's Ferry, whence ten miles of hauling over mountain roads and twice across the Tennessee on pontoon bridges brought us our supplies.

All night the point of Missionary Ridge on the extreme left and the side of Lookout Mountain, on the extreme right, blazed with the camp-fires of loyal troops.

The day had been one of dense mists and rains, and much of Gen. HOOKER's battle was fought above the clouds, which concealed him from our view, but from which his musketry was heard.

At nightfall the sky cleared and the full moon, "the traitors queen," chose upon the beautiful scene, until 1 A. M., when twinkling sparks upon the mountain side showed that picket skirmishing was going on. Then it ceased. A brigade, sent from Chattanooga, crossed the Chattanooga Creek and opened communication with HOOKER.

Gen. GRANT's headquarters during the afternoon of the 23d and the day of the 24th, were in WOOD's redoubt, except when, in the course of the day, he rode along the advanced line, visiting the headquarters of the several commanders, in Chattanooga Valley.

At daylight on the 25th the Stars and Stripes were descried on the peak of Lookout. The rebels had evacuated the mountain.

HOOKER moved to descend the mountain, and striking Mission Ridge at the Rossville Gap, to sweep on both sides and on its summit.

The rebel troops were seen as soon as it was light enough, streaming regiments and brigades along the narrow summit of Mission Ridge, either concentrating on the right to overwhelm SHERMAN, or marching for the railroad, and raising the siege.

They had evacuated the valley of Chattanooga—would they abandon that of Chickamauga?

The twenty-pounders and four and a quarter-inch rifles of WOOD's redoubt, opened on Mission Ridge, Orchard Knob and its compliments to the Ridge, which, with rifled Parrotts uncovered, and the cannonade thus commenced continued all day. Shot and shell streamed from Orchard Knob to Missionary Ridge, and from Missionary Ridge to Orchard Knob, and from Woods redoubt over the heads of Gen. GRANT and THOMAS and their Staffs, to the rebs with us in their favorable position, from whence the whole battle could be seen as in an amphitheatre. The headquarters tents under fire all day long.

Something not exceeding two pound from Gen. SHERMAN, and Gen. HOWARD matched the Eleventh corps to join him.

Gen. THOMAS sent out skirmishers who drove in the rebel pickets, and chased them into their intrenchments, and at the foot of Mission Ridge SHERMAN made an assault against BRAGG's right, intrenched on a high knob next to that on which SHERMAN himself lay fortified. The assault was gallantly made.

SHERMAN reached the edge of the crest, and held his ground for (it seemed to me) an hour, but was whipped repulsed by reserves.

A general advance was ordered, and a strong line of skirmishers, followed by a deployed line of battle, some two miles in length. At the signal of leaden shots from the headquarters on Orchard Knob, the line moved rapidly and orderly forward. The rebel pickets discharged their muskets and ran into their rifle-pits. Our skirmishers followed on their heels.

The line of battle was not far behind, and we saw the grey rebels swarm out of the ledge line of rifle-pits, in manner which surprised us, and over the base of the hill. A few turned and fired their pieces, but the greater number collected into the many roads which cross obliquely up its steep face, and went on to their top. Some regiments pressed on and swarmed up the steep sides of the ridge, and here and there a color was advanced beyond the lines. The attempt appeared most dangerous, but the advance was supported, and the whole line was ordered to storm the heights, upon which not less than forty pieces of artillery, and no one knew how many muskets, stood ready to slaughter the assailants. With cheers answering to cheers, the men swarmed upwards. They gathered to the points least difficult of ascent, and the line was broken. Color after color was planted on the summit, while musket and cannon vomited their thunder upon them.

A well-directed shot from Orchard Knob exploded a rebel caisson on the summit, and the gun was seen galloping to the right, its driver lashing his horses. A party of our soldiers intercepted them, and the gun was captured with cheers.

A fierce musketry fight broke out to the left, where, between THOMAS and SHERMAN, a mile or two of the ridge was still occupied by the rebels.

BRAGG left the house in which he had held his headquarters, and rode to the rear as our troops crowded the hill on either side of him.

Gen. GRANT proceeded to the summit, and there did we only know its height.

Some of the captured artillery was put into position. Artillerists were sent for to work the guns. Caissons were searched for ammunition.

The rebel log breastworks were torn to pieces and carried to the other side of the ridge, and used in forming barricades across.

A strong line of infantry was formed in the rear of BRAGG's line, hotly engaged in a musketry contest with the rebels to the left, and a secure lodgement was soon effected.

The other assault to the right of our centre gained the summit, and the rebels threw down their arms and fled.

HOOKER coming in favorable position, swept the right of the ridge and captured many prisoners.

BRAGG's remaining troops left early in the night, and the battle of Chattanooga, after days of maneuvring and fighting, was won. The strength of the rebellion in the centre is broken. BURNSIDE is relieved from danger in East Tennessee. Kentucky and Tennessee are rescued. Georgia and the southeast are threatened in the rear, and another victory is added to the chapter of "Unconditional Surrender GRANT."

To-night the estimate of captures is several thousands of prisoners and thirty pieces of artillery.

Our loss for so great a victory is not severe.

BRAGG is firing the railroad as he retreats towards Dalton. SHERMAN is in hot pursuit.

To-day I viewed the battle-field, which extends for six miles along Mission Ridge and for several miles on Lookout Mountain.

Probably not so well directed, so well ordered a battle has been delivered during the war. But one assault was repulsed—but that assault by uniting to that point the rebel reserves, prevented them repulsing any of the others.

A few days since BRAGG sent to Gen. GRANT a flag of truce, advising him that it would be prudent to remove non-combatants who might be still in Chattanooga.

No reply has been returned, but the combatants having removed from this vicinity, it is probable that non-combatants can remain without imprudence.

M. C. MEIGS, Quartermaster-General.

GEN. BURNSIDE'S SITUATION.

Interesting Statements by Col. Loiseau.

Col. LOISEAU, of the Roundhead (Pa.) regiment, who left Knoxville on Nov. 11, has given the Pittsburgh Chronicle the following interesting information regarding BURNSIDE's situation.

"That General says that BURNSIDE has been all along aware that a movement was to be made against him, and that the late fight at Campbell's station, and other points between Loudon and Knoxville, was not so much to allow his trains to get off as to afford his outlying posts, &c., to concentrate at Knoxville. This has been successfully done, and BURNSIDE's force now amounts, we are glad to say, to full 20,000 men. This includes, however, several new levies of East Tennesseans, who, although individually brave, are ignorant, badly drilled, and generally unreliable when hard pressed. BURNSIDE has plenty of guns and ammunition, and can hold Knoxville against four times his numbers. Some of the best batteries in the service, including one of 20-pound Parrotts, is with him, while the formidable fortifications stretching in a semi-circle a couple of miles from the town, and constructed by the rebels against us, have been materially strengthened under direction of Col. Fox.

"It is a mistake to suppose Knoxville closely invested. LONGSTREET is only on the north side, while the south and all the region across the Holston River is open to us. This district is full of forage, corn, wheat, &c. BURNSIDE has all the mills. He has also fortified the heights immediately across the river, and his batteries command for four miles the only practicable roads of approach to the city on that side.

"It is by this route BURNSIDE's telegraph to Cumberland Gap runs, by which he communicates with GRANT, and it is by this route he could retreat to Cumberland Gap if the rebels pressed him too hard. The most reliable troops with BURNSIDE are the Ninth army corps, now numbering about twelve thousand men. He has abundance of cavalry, under Gen. SHACKELFORD, the commander who chased MORGAN through Ohio, and altogether is able to give LONGSTREET a hard tussle.

Gen. LOISEAU states that not only has BURNSIDE entire confidence in his position, but that his whole army have entire confidence in him, and will hear of his being relieved with great regret. It is probable that by this time the railroad between Cleveland and Loudon, by which LONGSTREET came, and must get all his supplies, has been cut either by GRANT's or BURNSIDE's cavalry; and if this be the case, LONGSTREET will have a very hard road to travel. He has already been punished severely, and it will be a singular thing if, between SHERMAN and BURNSIDE, he be not caught in a trap which will finish his campaign for some time to come.

The troops which were probably intended to reinforce LONGSTREET from Lee and Lynchburgh and Petersburg, have doubtless been recalled to Gordonsville, by MEADE's threatened advance. MEADE is waiting on the banks of the Rapidan, to strike at LEE whenever that General shows any symptoms of weakening himself to strengthen either BRAGG or LONGSTREET, so that the situation appears to be satisfactory all around. LONGSTREET's force is composed chiefly of Alabamians and Georgians, but with the exception of HOOD's division, the rest are not the best troops in the South. Besides, even supposing his railroad communications uncut, he will have to wagon all his supplies over most wretched roads for over thirty miles. This he cannot do long, so that if he be not overwhelmed, we may soon expect to hear of his speedy retirement.

A DISPATCH FROM PARSON BROWNLOW.

The following dispatch appears in the Cincinnati Gazette:

CAMP LOUDON, KY., Wednesday, Nov. 25.

Gen. BURNSIDE still holds Knoxville, and has held the position for ten days, against great odds. He is a noble and military hero, and has covered himself in the Union men of East Tennessee in no less every fold and preserve the honor and confidence of the whole country. My family are in Knoxville, and I am on my way to Cincinnati, ordered to leave by the military authorities. I shall return by Christmas.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Nov. 28.

THE PRESIDENT'S OFFICIAL REPORT.

The condition of the President, who has been confined to his chamber for several days by sickness, continued to be much improved to-day, and to promise an early recovery of health. There is nothing in the symptoms of his ailment to excite the fears of his friends.

THE IRON-CLAD SARSAMON.

A commission of competent engineers has, by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, made a thorough examination of the iron-clad Sassamon, now lying at Washington Yard, and pronounced her to all respects seaworthy.

INCREASE OF THE TAX ON DISTILLED LIQUORS.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has concluded to recommend in his report to the Secretary of the Treasury a large increase in the excise tax on distilled spirits, the present tax being considered absurdly low as compared with that levied by other Governments, while in England it yields twenty per centum and upward of the gross internal revenue of that country. In our own it yields less than ten per centum. As it is deemed necessary to increase taxation to make the law meet the expectations of Congress, there is no article on which it can be better levied than on this. Therefore, the Commissioner will ask that the tax be increased to fifty or sixty cents, probably to the later sum.

THE PROVOST-MARSHAL OF ALEXANDRIA.

Some idea may be formed of the immense amount of business transacted at the office of Lieut.-Col. W. H. WELLS, Provost-Marshal for the defenses south of the Potomac, Alexandria, Va., by reference to the following statement:

Number of prisoners arrested or forwarded from June 1, 1863, to Nov. 15, 1863, 2,345.

Number of passes issued to citizens from June 1 1863, to Nov. 15, 1863, 60,196.

Number of permits to take out supplies issued from June 1 to Nov. 15, 1863, 5,116. (This item may vary somewhat.)

The number of horses and mules captured from June 1, 1863, to Nov. 15, 1863, 302.

NOTE.—A very large amount of miscellaneous goods have been captured and turned over, the value of which we have no means of estimating, and a schedule of which would be very voluminous.

PRIZE SCHOONERS.

Prize schooner Arabe, captured off Wilmington, and schooner Geo. Chisholm, off Seakee River, each with cargoes of salt, from Nassau, have arrived at Washington.

ESCAPE OF JOHN MORGAN.

COLUMBUS, Saturday, Nov. 28.

Major-Gen. JOHN MORGAN and six of his officers—Capts. BENNETT, TAYLOR, SHELDON, HAYNES, HACKENSMITH and MAGEE—escaped from the Ohio Penitentiary this morning between 2 o'clock and daylight.

JOHN MORGAN, on retiring, changed with his brother DICK from the top cell to the lower tier. The floor of the lower cell is two and a half inches thick, in which a hole was cut, under the bed, leading down into a two and a half foot sewer, running to the main wall around the Penitentiary. This wall was cut under, and the party escaped into the open country. The night was dark, with heavy rain. All efforts are being made by the authorities for his recapture.

CINCINNATI, Friday, Nov. 28.

JOHN MORGAN and six of his officers, viz.: Capts. BENNETT, TAYLOR, SHELDON, HAYNES, HACKENSMITH, and MCGEE, escaped from Columbus Penitentiary last night, by digging through the floor of their cell to a sewer leading to the river. One thousand dollars reward is offered for the arrest of MORGAN.

A BRITISH STEAMER SEARCHED.

Passengers by the Corsica Examined—A Confederate Mail and Rebel Funds Found.

On the arrival of the British steamship Corsica, on Friday, from Havana and Nassau, she was boarded by the Custom-house officials in force. Every passenger on board was thoroughly searched in their persons and baggage, when a large amount of specie and Confederate money, also a large Confederate mail, was found. We did not hear of any of the passengers being detained in custody.

From Fortress Monroe.

FORTRESS MONROE, Saturday, Nov. 28.

About two thousand boxes and packages arrived here yesterday by Adams' Express, en route for National prisoners in and about Richmond, from their friends at the North.

The steamer Cosgarver sailed for Newberne, N. C., at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The Prize-Steamer Herald at Boston.

BOSTON, Saturday, Nov. 28.

The British steamer Herald, in charge of Acting Master KING, from Port Royal, S. C., arrived here this morning. She was captured Oct. 25, by the gunboat Tioga, on the Bahama Banks, while on the passage from Savannah to NASSAU. She has 261 bales of cotton on board.

Bounty in Erie County.

BUFFALO, Saturday, Nov. 28.

The Board of Supervisors have to-day adopted a resolution appropriating five hundred thousand dollars for bounties in Erie County, each recruit to receive three hundred dollars.

Sailing of the North American.

PORTLAND, Me., Saturday, Nov. 28.

The steamship North American sailed at 4:30 P. M. to-day for Liverpool.

Additional from the Bermudas.

THE PIRATE SUMTER.

From the Newark Advertiser, Nov. 27.

Mr. ABRAM VAN WINKLE, of this city, who, with his wife, was a passenger on the Harvest Queen, which arrived at New-York from St. George, Bermuda, on Wednesday evening, has given us some information from that Anglo-rebel island—the chief resort of the blockade-runners.

The steamer Gladiator, formerly the noted privateer Sumter, arrived at Hamilton on Sunday, the 15th inst., in four days from Wilmington with 500 bales of cotton, having succeeded in eluding the vigilance of our blockading squadron. She was cooling there and would leave in a day or two for Liverpool. It was understood among the Southerners there that she would receive an armament and resume her old occupation as privateer.

The Clyde steamer Serene, of 160 tons burden, reached Hamilton on Friday, the 13th. She is one hundred and eighty feet long, can carry three hundred bales of cotton, draws but three feet nine inches water, and on the trip from St. George to Hamilton ran nineteen miles an hour. She was being painted lead color when Mr. VAN WINKLE left, and was intended for running the blockade. The steamers City of Petersburgh, from Greenock, Scotland, and Cove, from London, each loaded with very valuable cargoes of merchandise, had reached Hamilton, intending to run the blockade. Both vessels are also very fast.

There was quite a fleet of blockade-runners in the harbor, all of which were being painted lead-color. They are low, long vessels of great speed, and hardly discernible in the night. These vessels clear from Hamilton for Nassau, but as soon as they get out to sea sail straight for Wilmington! If sought by our West India squadron their Nassau clearance is made a pretext for release. Recent trips have, however, been very unfortunate, five of seven blockade runners having been caught by our cruisers off Wilmington. New and faster vessels are, however, constantly arriving and running their cargoes.

Among the passengers on the Harvest Queen was the widow of Ex-President TYLER, who had run the blockade from Wilmington.

GEN. BANKS' DEPARTMENT.

Operations in Texas Still Successful.

Surprise of the Enemy in Western Louisiana.

Attempt of the Rebels to Interrupt River Navigation.

The U. S. mail steamer George Washington, Capt. WILLARD, from New-Orleans, arrived yesterday evening, bringing dates to the 21st inst. She has a full passenger list, the mails, and a large and valuable cargo.

To Mr. H. S. ALLEN, the Purser of the ship, we are again indebted for full files of papers and the prompt delivery of our correspondence.

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, Nov. 21, 1863—7 A. M.

News from Gen. BANKS in Texas continues good. He has captured Corpus Christi and several smaller places. The Texans are exhibiting strong evidences of Unionism wherever the army marches—so much so that arms and equipments for them, particularly for the cavalry service, are being sent from here.

From Western Louisiana there is news of a very well managed reconnoissance and surprise of the enemy. On the 20th, cavalry were sent out on the Abbeville road, and the Vermilion road, a mile in the rear of Camp Pratt, supported by infantry and artillery. They took the enemy completely by surprise, capturing the whole of the Sixth Texas, (with the exception of 25 men,) commanded by Col. EAGLES. The Lieutenant-Colonel and Major were absent and escaped. They also dispersed the Second Louisiana cavalry (rebel) and returned with slight loss.

The British brig Dashing Wave arrived here on the 20th, a prize to the gunboat New-London. She was captured going into the Rio Grande. She had on board a cargo of clothing and medicines and $70,000 in gold.

Reports from the Mississippi River are that a rebel force ranging from 5,000 to 10,000 men are trying to concentrate at some point on the river not far above Port Hudson, to impede navigation. On the 15th the steamboat Emerald was attacked by a section of this force having four pieces of artillery. They fired several shots at her, one of which went through the pilot-house. She was struck also by a shell in the boiler deck. There being a heavy fog, she escaped further injury. No lives were lost. There is a report, which is authentic, of a strong rebel force gathering at Clinton, La., and another at Woodville, Miss. The rebels are very active all along the river from Baton Rouge to the Mississippi State line, and all their movements look to preparations for concentrating at some point on the river in heavy force, and planting batteries to obstruct the commerce of the Mississippi. Their plans will be developed shortly.

The steamer White Cloud arrived last night, bringing 2,000 barrels of flour.

The steamer Sunny Side, from Memphis for the Ohio River, with 100 bales of cotton and a number of passengers, was destroyed by fire, several lady passengers being burned to death or drowned.

On the 17th inst. our forces attacked Aransas City, Texas, and it surrendered. We captured 160 prisoners and three guns.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

No News of the Advance—Our Cavalry on Friday near the Chancellorville Battle-Ground.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Nov. 28.

No intelligence respecting the Army of the Potomac has been received to-day at army headquarters, up to 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The Star says that yesterday morning our cavalry pushed forward as far as Locust Grove, where they met the advance of the rebel cavalry, and the latter were driven across Russell Creek, or river, and afterwards across Mill Run. A body of rebel infantry was posted between that point and Orange Court-house, and the whole rebel force moved off in the direction of the latter place.

Locust Grove is four miles south of Germanna Ford, in Orange County, and within a short distance of the wilderness where HOOKER fought his battle.

Mill Run is two miles from Locust Grove, and from there to Mountain River, where the rebel Gen. EARLY, with EWELL's old corps, is said to be in force, is about six miles. Orange Court-house is eight or ten miles further on in a southwest direction.

A Steamer Burned at Port Hudson with 2,500 Bales of Cotton—Price of Cotton at Memphis.

CAIRO, Ill., Saturday, Nov. 28.

A steamer from Natchez, bound for New-Orleans, laden with 2,500 bales of Cotton, was entirely consumed by fire at Port Hudson last week.

On the 25th instant, Cotton was in better demand at Memphis than for several days previous. Factors generally were holding the higher grades for better prices. Over 400 bales were sold at prices averaging from 35c.@75c.

Seven hundred bales of Cotton passed Cairo yesterday, en route for Cincinnati.

The Cherokee Indians Asking for Relief, etc.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Saturday, Nov. 14.

A delegation of Cherokee Indians, headed by Capt. CHERRY, acting Chief, paid their respects to Gen. MCNEIL, to-day, by order of their National Council.

It is reported that CHERRY recounted the sufferings of the Indians from roving banditti; asked for protection against their depredations; desired authority to raise a regiment of cavalry, and to adopt guerrilla warfare as the only means of ridding themselves of mounted marauders. Also, that they asked that the districts allotted for their settlement should be better protected by the United States authorities, so as to enable the Indians to cultivate the soil and secure more comfortable homes.

Gen. MCNEIL replied that he represented the condition of the Indians to the proper authority, recommending some measures for their improvement, and that he would afford them all the protection in his power.

FRANCE.

SITUATION OF THE EMPIRE.

From Galignani, Nov. 12.

The official statement of the situation of the Empire, composed of reports sent in from the various Ministerial departments, has been distributed to the members of the Two Chambers. As the financial explanations are to be presented separately, nothing is said for the moment of that branch of the service. For Foreign Affairs, the account published commences in these terms:

THE POLISH QUESTION.

At the opening of the last session of the great bodies of the State, the Emperor's Government congratulated itself on the general situation of Europe. If some difficulties existed on different points of the Continent, there was nothing to lead to the anticipation of speedy complications, and in particular nothing to announce that the Polish question was on the eve of again forcing itself on the attention of the Cabinets.

For the last two years a certain degree of agitation prevailed in Poland, but no project of a rising manifested itself; everything, on the contrary, appeared to show that a recourse to arms no more entered into the calculations of the men invested with the confidence of the country than into the wishes of the people. The recruitment, transformed into a measure of proscription, drove to despair those whom it threatened to affect, and conflicts broke out simultaneously on several points.

The question, however, did not present itself except under the auspices of a purely local movement caused by a determinate cause of complaint. The convention signed at St. Petersburgh on Feb. 8, by which, under pretext of maintaining order on the frontier, Prussia bound herself toward Russia to cooperate in a certain degree in the repression, gave to the struggle an international character, and obliged the Cabinets to occupy themselves with it.

The Polish question is essentially European, for it cannot put itself forward without involving the most important interests. France signed the documents under the protection of which Poland has been placed, and French sympathies have never been wanting to that nation in her former trials. It is a tradition which the Emperor's Government could less avoid deferring to than any other.

England had the same rights and the same reasons for interfering. The French Government therefore applied to that Power, to come to an understanding, in order to represent in concert to the Cabinet of Berlin, the danger of her intermeddling in an affair of which she was so unfortunately extending the importance. We moreover were aware that Austria regarded the engagements concluded at St. Petersburgh in the same light as ourselves. The Emperor's Government made known to her its intentions. The Cabinet of Vienna had already expressed its sentiments to Prussia and to Russia, when they solicited her adhesion to those arrangements. The proceedings adopted with the Prussian Court had for result to obtain explanations which lessened the fear which had been entertained of seeing her take an active part in the hostilities.

When we had to make known our views at Berlin, we took care to avoid any isolated action, and also to avoid any false interpretation. The nature, however, of our relations with Russia, authorized and induced us at the same time to attempt with her the plan of personal efforts and friendly counsels before coming to official communications and a combined action.

The French Government had not waited, in order to give prudent advice, to be constrained to it by urgent necessity. In 1857, His Majesty wishing to avail himself, in the interest of order and of peace, of the confidence which so happily united the two Cabinets, felt himself induced by the sincerity of his esteem and of his friendship for the Emperor ALEXANDER, to recommend the state of Poland to the solicitude of the Court of Russia. Such language was worthy of being understood by the Sovereign who was about to give, in the emancipation of serfs, so striking a proof of his prudence. Facts have since too strongly shown the opportuneness of those suggestions, and testify every day how much it is to be regretted that they were not listened to.

His Majesty's Government, in presence of the conjunctures which have justified its previsions, considered it as a duty not to conceal its anxieties from Russia. It pointed out with unreserved frankness our perplexities in the midst of events of which the public opinion of the country, as well as the general interests of Europe, would not allow us to remain indifferent spectators. The French Ambassador was instructed to point out, in terms the most conformable to the friendly relations of the Governments, the advantages of a policy of reparation and of progress.

The English Government, in a dispatch addressed at that time to its representative at St. Petersburgh, recommended a general amnesty and the restitution of the privileges granted to the Poles by the Emperor ALEXANDER I. The French Cabinet could not but approve of the applications, which to a certain point entered into the more general order of ideas which it also entertained, but in order to leave to Russia the merit of entire spontaneousness, it abstained from directly supporting them. The English Cabinet having afterward proposed to invite the parties who signed the general Treaty of Vienna to express similar wishes, the Government of His Majesty announced its intention of adhering to that proposal only in case of obtaining the consent of the other Powers.

We had pointed out to the Russian Cabinet the interest it had (anticipating diplomatic representations) by resolutely assuming the initiative. But we had not obtained any promise—any assurance that would allow us to hope for a satisfactory result from a longer personal pressure. It became necessary to adopt another course.

The Government of her Britannic Majesty had preceded us in its communications to the Russian Cabinet. Austria, without viewing events in the same light as England, continued to observe a well-disposed neutrality as to the Poles. The Emperor's Government accordingly flattered itself with the hope of forming between the three Courts an understanding which would insure to their measures the European character required by the nature of the interests at stake, and at once unite all the guarantees of moderation and force.

The Cabinet of London, in its first communication, had taken the treaties of 1815 as a starting-point. Russia had made a precise reply by contesting the interpretation given to them by the principal Secretary of State; she confined herself, as a method of pacification, to speaking of an amnesty after the war, and promising not to withdraw any of the concessions she had made. The French Government doubted the success of any measure based exclusively on those treaties, and thought that matters should be viewed from a higher ground. The acts of 1815 assuredly conceded precious advantages to the Poles, in reviving the Polish name, in stipulating for her national institutions, and in establishing certain links between all the parts of the kingdom as it existed before the first partition. But those arrangements have not prevented the recurrence of commotions which periodically menace the repose of Europe. Without denying that the treaties offered to the Cabinets a legal motive of intervention, the French Government thought that it would be proper to invoke principally the interests of European order common to all the Powers.

The two Cabinets appreciated these considerations; and the Emperor's Government made them the subject of a dispatch to the French Ambassador at St. Petersburgh. The dispatch concluded by signalizing the opportunity of considering the means of placing Poland in the conditions of a durable peace.

Austria, whilst alleging special interests as a Power contiguous and more exposed to the influence of these disturbances, held a language similar to our own. England, without abandoning her first engagement on the treaties, reproduced, in a briefer form, the ideas which we had developed. The greater part of the States of Europe gave their adhesion to them, and thus stamped the communications of the three Courts with the character of a veritable European manifestation.

Russia appeared to receive those overtures with favor. Although she endeavored to cast the responsibility of the Polish movement on conveyances from without and revolutionary intrigues, she recognized the extent of the evil, and the insufficiency of the measures adopted up to that time to provide a remedy. She neither contested the general interests engaged in the Polish question, nor the special interests of contiguous States. She did not decline the concurrence of the Governments who signed the final act of the Treaty of Vienna, but appeared, on the contrary, to accept their assistance for a deliberation, the bases of which she invited the three Powers to communicate.

England was of opinion that the negotiations should be preceded, by an armistice, in spite of the difficulties which an armistice might encounter. The idea of stopping, as soon as possible, the effusion of blood was too conformable to the feelings of the French Government not to obtain its approbation; and whilst itself acquiesced, it recommended the same to the Court of Austria.

The Cabinet of Vienna, on its part, drew up a programme in six articles, the principal object of which was to claim for Poland institutions similar to those of Galicia. Judging these demands insufficient, the French Government intercepted notable modifications in them, and for the sake of a good understanding agreed to admit the programme, but only as a starting-point for the conferences. We had, besides, attached much value to an appeal made to the wisdom of Europe to participate in the negotiations. France has constantly declared that she will always be found ready to enter on such discussions in the full light of day.

The three Courts, in the communications which they a second time directed to their Ambassadors, had not succeeded in avoiding certain shades of expression which could not escape the attention of Russia. It might have been foreseen that that Power would seek to derive profit from the supposed diversity of views. In order to parry that danger as much as possible, the French Government made to the Vienna and London Cabinets a proposal to consolidate the accord by intimate, in the form of a convention or a protocol, an engagement to concert in common a regulation of Polish affairs, by diplomatic methods, or otherwise, if necessary. Such an engagement, besides the immediate advantage of uniting the authority of the language of the allied Courts, would have offered to that Power whose position required most consideration the guarantees of a complete solidarity in all eventualities. We were persuaded that the surest method of preventing complications was to show ourselves ready to meet them with all the firmness required, and that conflicts between Governments look their origin not so often in bold resolutions as in premeditations and hesitations that allowed difficulties to become aggravated. Our proposition was not accepted. The Russian Court replied to the programme of the three Powers by an absolute refusal. She consented to take the six points into consideration, but only when the insurrection was suppressed. She rejected all idea of a suspension of arms, and denied the competency of the Powers which signed the General Act of 1815, which she had previously admitted, she proposed to open with Austria and Prussia, as participating Powers, a separate negotiation.

The Vienna Cabinet rejected that proposal without hesitation, as being contrary to her duties to the two other Powers, and gave explanations at St. Petersburgh with a spontaneousness and a frankness which did honor to her sincerity.

The French Government at the same time expressed at London and Vienna the painful impression it had felt on receiving the replies of Russia. The three Cabinets addressed fresh communications to St. Petersburgh, the conclusions of which were conceived in identical terms. They unanimously declared Russia to be responsible for the consequences which might arise from a refusal to take their representations into account, and from the prolongation of the troubles in Poland. The last dispatches of Prince GORTSCHAKOFF are well known.

Notwithstanding the little success of the diplomatic intervention of the three Powers, the Emperor's Government has the satisfaction of knowing that it has, from the moment in which the Polish question was brought forward, in the measure of its rights and its duties toward England, neglected nothing to arrive at a solution. Ever attentive to the painful spectacle of the struggle which is going on in Poland, it loses sight of none of the interests which are connected with that conflict. It will maintain its accord with England and Austria, and it cannot believe that the union of the Cabinets, in an affair so worthy of their solicitude, must remain sterile.

We have not, however, the pretension to impose our solutions on the Powers interested, as much or even more directly than ourselves in the settlement of the existing difficulties. In a question essentially European, it is neither in conformity with our obligations or our rights to incur alone a responsibility which it is the duty of all to partake.

The Danish dispute, Rome and Italy, the relations with Turkey, and the situation of Montenegro are touched up, and then the

"The sad previsions suggested by the recuperation of the struggle carried on during three years in the United States, have been but too much realized. Blood has continued to flow, whilst the respective situations of the belligerents do not allow us to anticipate a period of this terrible crisis. In presence of such an accumulation of ruins, and such a sacrifice of life in a struggle hitherto fruitless, we have felt profound regret that the proposition which we made at London and at St. Petersburgh, to unite in proposing an armistice, was not accepted. Compelled to renounce that project by a double refusal, we have, however, declared that our desire to contribute to the reestablishment of peace in any form would not be the less lively and sincere. We have given proof of this by suggesting the idea of substituting for the project of an armistice the proposition of the three Powers, the expedient of direct messages between the Government of the United States and the Confederates of the South. This new attempt has not been more fortunate than the preceding.

From that time we have nothing left but to follow out the line of conduct adopted ever since the beginning of this war by the Government of the Emperor. This we have striven to do with circumspection under all circumstances. We have remained central and well disposed; although it has often been difficult for us to reconcile this part with our duties toward our fellow-countrymen. Independently of the sufferings, which, in our departments, are the consequence of the American crisis, hostilities on the territory of the Union itself have caused considerable detriment and loss to French residents. They have often had occasion to make just complaints of the abusive proceedings of the civil and military authorities. Our countrymen must understand that their interests, like those of other foreigners, cannot claim an exceptional security in the midst of the tumult of arms, and that in such cases all ordinary guarantees necessarily lose something of their efficacy. Moreover, a state of war involves inevitable letters on the commerce of neutrals. If the presence of liberal doctrines tends to relax them, it cannot wholly suppress them.

The Cabinet of Washington has been able to satisfy itself that we have made, in our reclamations, a large allowance for these difficulties. But the Government of the Emperor, caused disquiet by the pursuing so many aggrieved interests, will deserving of its care, making a vain appeal for protection."

MEXICO.

The object which the French Government aimed at in Mexico is declared to be very near its final accomplishment. The following is the language used:

"The Emperor's Government is on the point of attaining the object which it proposed to itself when it displayed the flag of France on the shores of Mexico. The success of our arms, by rendering the country free to dispose of itself, has confirmed the hopes which we founded in the good sense of the Mexican nation. The capture of Puebla has become a new title of glory for our heroic army; and the acclamations which greeted it in entering Mexico have loudly testified that our soldiers were received there as liberators. The Assembly of Notables has pronounced that Mexico could only expect regeneration from a monarchical institution. It also at the same time designated to the Mexican nation the Prince whom political circumstances appeared to ourselves to indicate as most preferable. The expression of these wishes, inspired by a just confidence in the high and brilliant qualities of him to whom they were addressed, has been favorably received, with the sole reserve that the whole nation should be called on to ratify the patriotic and spontaneous impulse which decides the vocation of the nation charged to offer the crown of Mexico to the Archduke MAXIMILIAN. This is how we, on our part, had understood the bearing of the resolutions of the Assembly.

Whatever might be the authority of the influential men who composed it, their decisions, in our opinion, to become definitive, must receive from the population a more explicit sanction. We congratulate ourselves on seeing our ideas shared by the eminent Prince whom Mexico calls to inaugurate its new destinies.

The fortune of France and the blood of her children belong to France only. An evident and important French interest could therefore alone determine the Emperor's Government to engage in an undertaking of which it had foreseen and weighed the extent and difficulties. It has, moreover, foreseen the solution of Mexico as a peculiar consequence of the military condition to which it was constrained. The public feeling of the country and the wisdom of the Archduke MAXIMILIAN justify all our hopes in this matter.

In an early future we expect to receive from the new Government of Mexico the guarantees which have been wanting to our interests under all the Governments which preceded it. For the moment, important questions necessarily remain to be settled concerning ourselves; for the military return of our expedition has only prepared the ground for solving negotiations. The Emperor's Government will devote all its attention to them."

The United States of South America, the late revolution in Madagascar and the rebellion in China are very briefly alluded to, and that part of the document relative to foreign affairs concludes with a reference to Japan.

THE PROPOSED CONGRESS.

FULL TEXT OF THE EMPEROR'S LETTER.

The following is the full text of the Emperor's letter to the Sovereigns of Europe, as published in the Moniteur of Nov. 11:

In presence of the events which each day arrive and press on, I believe it indispensable to make known, as I say thought to the Sovereigns to whom is confided the direction of the destinies of their peoples.

At all times when previous events have disturbed the harmony existing between the Sovereigns of States there have been found, in their mutual relations, to regulate the new elements that it concerns, while providing for them, the very necessary recompilations. Such was the object of the Treaty of Westphalia in the 17th century, and of the negotiations of Vienna in 1815. It is on this latter foundation that the political edifice of Europe reposes to-day, and, nevertheless, as you cannot be ignorant, it is crumbling away on all sides.

If we hereafter attentively the situation of the various countries, it is impossible to recognize that almost at all points the treaties of Vienna are destroyed, modified, misinterpreted, or scorned. Recondition without regulation, rights without title, and pretensions without rest. Peril be upon the most formidable that the improvements brought about by the civilization which has bound nations nearer to each other, through the solidarity of material interests, render our war more destructive than ever.

We have duty, then, a subject for grave meditations. Let us not wait, before taking our part, for crowded and probable events to disturb our judgment, and drag us, despite ourselves, into a contrary direction.

I prefer, therefore, to propose to you to regulate the present and ensure the future in a Congress.

Called to the throne by Providence and the will of the French people, but trained in the school of adversity, it is perhaps less allowable for me than any other to ignore the rights of Sovereigns and the legitimate aspirations of peoples.

Thus I cherish no more the absurd preconceived system to bring to an International Congress the spirit of moderation, of conciliation, of impartiality, the portion of those who have conducted so many various affairs.

If I take the initiative in such an overture I do not yield to the impulse of vanity, but, as I am a Sovereign the most credited with ambitious projects, I have it at least to prove by a frank and loyal step that my ambition is to survive without a shock at the pacification of Europe. If this proposition be accepted I pray you to accept Paris as the place of meeting.

In case the Princes allied with and friendly to France would deem it suitable to enhance by their presence the authority of the deliberations, I shall be proud to offer them my cordial hospitality. Europe would perhaps see some advantage in the capital whence the signal for overthrow has so many times been given, hosting the conferences destined to lay the basis of a general pacification.

Written at Paris, 4th November, 1863.

HOW THE PROJECT IS RECEIVED.

IN PARIS.

Correspondence of the London News.

PARIS, Wednesday, Nov. 11, 1863.

The Constitutionnel and Pays have both received instructions to anticipate the failure of the proposal for a Congress; and they argue, in almost identical terms, that Europe alone will be disgraced and injured by the refusal of the Emperor's magnanimous and disinterested offer; and that, in any event, France will have gained a moral triumph, and may fold her arms with a sense of conscious superiority. They lay themselves out to rebut the inference which the public generally incline to draw from the imperial speech, that in default of a Congress there must be war. The Emperor does not say, they are ordered to observe, that if you do not come into a Congress, "I will make war;" but that if you reject the peaceful which his infinite wisdom has provided for you, your calamity will be on your own head; "the war which he does not wish, but foresees," will be constantly hanging over you, and he will have relieved his soul from all responsibility for it. The aim of these articles is to serve the immediate purpose of mitigating the alarm of the Bourse. If they are, in a larger sense, well founded, they tend to confirm the views of those who from the first interpreted the speech as implying a tacit assumption that the proposal for a Congress was not serious, but only an excellent and a jack-o-lanthorn diversion. It will not do, however, to trust to this construction. All the powers of Europe will now, more than ever, keep their hands on the hilt of the sword, and augment those arguments which the speech so unanimously desires to see diminished.

Correspondence of the London Star.

PARIS, Thursday Evening, Nov. 12, 1863.

The impracticability of the Congress is now pretty universally admitted, in spite of the Emperor's letter and the articles in the semi-official Press. Nor can I say that I detect any doubts as to the ultimate issue among the public. What the public are anxious to know is what foreign Powers will have to say to the Emperor's proposal, and a great many rumors are circulated on the subject. There are people here, as everywhere else, who pretend they are able to see much further than their neighbors, who confidently assert that Russia will accept the Congress, just as it is, six months ago they protested that Russia would accept the "six points." That view I have disposed of in a former letter, and I have not heard or seen anything since then calculated to alter my opinion. On one point, however, there is no doubt. Victor EMMANUEL is prepared to join the Emperor in a Congress or in a war, or whatever else he may think fit to propose; but, according to the prevalent belief, England, Russia, Prussia and Austria will receive their replies until they know what are the special points that are to be brought before the Congress. On the other hand, the Sultan, Spain, Portugal and the Scandinavian Powers to-day seem as highly probable.

IN VIENNA.

Correspondence of the London Times.

VIENNA, Tuesday, Nov. 10.

In the morning of the 7th inst., a Cabinet messenger brought to this city an autograph letter from the Emperor NAPOLEON to the Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH, and in the afternoon of the same day the French Ambassador at Court presented it to His Majesty. During the last three days there has been a very active telegraphic correspondence between Vienna and London, and it is here said that no answer will be given to the Imperial mission until the intentions of the British Government are fully known. In my letter of the 7th inst., it was stated that "up to the very last minute" the semi-official organs of this Government positively asserted that the French speech would contain nothing calculated to convey Austria, and I am unwilling to inferior you how far events either justify or confute my own calculations. Early in the morning of the 5th inst. M. DRUYN DE LHUYS forwarded to M. DE GRAMONT a telegram, in which it was said that Austria would have reason to be satisfied with the Emperor's speech. A copy of the telegram was sent to Count RECHBERG, who lost no time in communicating such agreeable information to his Sovereign. During the whole day the Austrians exulted greatly, but shortly after the sun had set they, to their great vexation, discovered that the information received from M. DE GRAMONT was incorrect. At 9 o'clock in the evening of the 5th inst. Count RECHBERG, the French Ambassador, and some other statesmen and diplomatists, were at Prince METTERNICH's, and there it was that they first got sight of the Imperial speech, which was telegraphed to this city in extenso. Count RECHBERG and the Duke DE GRAMONT are said to have been much perturbed while the document was being read, but Prince METTERNICH was as calm and collected as his illustrious father would, under similar circumstances, have been." In the afternoon of Saturday, the 7th inst., the Prince returned to Paris, and shortly before his departure he had a long interview with the Lord CowLEY as soon as he reached his destination. Men in office appear to have come to the conclusion that it would be impolitic to decline the invitation of the Emperor of the French, but before it accepts it the Austrian Cabinet will try to obtain from the French Government a promise that the Venetian question shall not be brought forward. Although the Emperor of the French declared that the treaties of 1815 had ceased to exist, he has invited the Sovereign German Bund, which was established by the Congress of Vienna, to attend the Congress of Princes. In the year 1848 neither France nor England would officially recognize the representatives of Germany. Herr MINTNICH, Queen VICTORIA refused to admit Baron BUNSEN to her presence, and M. BASTIDE, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, received M. von RAUMER coldly and formally. In the Paris Pays of 11 was there or three days ago said that Prince METTERNICH would be recalled from Paris; but the Wiener Zeitung states that there has never been a question of removing him from his post. Right or wrong, he has a strong ally in the wind was blowing here, and it is very possible that attempts were made to deprive Prince METTERNICH of the confidence of his Sovereign; but His Majesty must be well aware that he has no more faithful and devoted servant than the son of the man from whom he learned the rudiments of statecraft.

IN ST. PETERSBURGH.

Correspondence of the London Herald.

ST. PETERSBURGH, Saturday, Nov. 7, 1863.

Last night the telegraph brought us an extract from the Emperor NAPOLEON's speech, which has taken everybody by surprise, for though we are accustomed to sudden changes in the Emperor's policy, they do not generally take the form of a bolt from the blue. The government heard it not less surprised than the public, and nothing is said to-day in yesterday's official journal. It is believed that the Administration had been led to hope that the Emperor intended to shift his ground with respect to the Polish question, and that, if it will be a surprise for the friends of Poland, who, after heaping their gratitude on Napoleon for so many months, and after being lured on by the repeated embassies of diplomatic agents, who, if they did not promise anything, are now in a state of exasperation against the Emperor, the Polish question may or may not occupy the first place, and if, which, of course, nothing could be done which would be satisfactory to Russia. Now the Poles will see that they have been duped; but I think the Russians will be disappointed, and they will begin to understand that the premises upon which they have relied for so many years are never destined to be realized.

IN BERLIN.

Correspondence of the London Star.

BERLIN, Wednesday, Nov. 11, 1863.

The Emperor NAPOLEON has proposed a series of surprises for the politicians and diplomatists of Prussia, no less than of the rest of Europe. The announcement of his invitation to the monarchs of all the principal nations of Europe to take part in a Congress proposed to be held in Paris for the regulation of all knotting and mooting questions of general European interest took every one by surprise. L'Europe, of Frankfort, published last night the full text of the Emperor's invitation to the German Bund. From certain indications it appears not improbable that the King of Prussia would not be averse to take part in the Congress, provided the other sovereigns of Europe generally accepted the invitation. There are many voices among the people, however, raised against the project. They declare that no good can be expected from a Congress of sovereigns. It will be, according to these parties, a crowned conspiracy against political freedom, and progress. The Prussian papers have not had much time to criticise the inaugural speech of the Emperor at the opening of the French Chambers. So far as they have done so, they have uttered a divided judgment on the subject. Some only nothing could be more satisfactory than the creation of Nov. 5, and they see in it the signs of a more peaceful state of affairs in Europe for the future. Others regard the fair words of NAPOLEON as the disguise behind which the most warlike intentions are concealed. The latter was indeed the prevailing feeling at first, and manifested itself by a general decline of questions at the Exchange.

AN OVERSHOT.

Correspondence of the London Times.

PARIS, Tuesday, Nov. 10, 1863.

It appears that in sending the letters for the Congress to the Sovereign Princes of Europe four German Princes were completely forgotten. They are, it is true, of the most microscopic dimensions; but as we often find very little bodies the most conceited and the most touchy about their dignity, the said Princes may consider it as an intended slight. There was no slight meant; it was merely an oversight, and the Gotha Almanac may not have been at hand at the moment. I understand the mistake has been repaired. The letters have been duly posted, and, I presume, prepaid.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A SCANDAL IN HIGH LIFE.

THE GOSSIP ABOUT LORD PALMERSTON.

Under the head of the "Lounger at the Clubs," the London Illustrated Times has the following:

"It is impossible to pass the 'tremendous scandal of the day' in silence. I will, therefore, tell your readers all I know upon the subject. But I will tell them no more. Of course, there are rumors enough afloat; but mere rumors affecting private character must find no place in your columns. All, however, I know is this: There will shortly come before the Divorce Court a case in which a Mr. O'KEEFE will appear as plaintiff and Lord PALMERSTON will figure as co-respondent. This, I believe, is all that has been divulged to the public, and all that goes beyond this is mere rumor and not trustworthy. Something, however, is known about the solicitor for the plaintiff, and what is known it may be as well to publish. His name is THOMAS WELLS; his office is No. 47 Moorgate-street; and he is the same THOMAS WELLS who advertises in the morning papers that he, in conjunction with a Mr. WARNE, advances money on good security; helps the 'embarrassed' who are struggling against the force of misfortune' to effect compositions with their creditors; obtains 'protection in cases from £5, (whatever that may mean,) payable by installments,' and that by him and his partner, Mr. WARNE, 'divorce cases are confidentially conducted.' There can be no doubt that the advertising Mr. THOMAS WELLS is the solicitor for the petitioner, for he himself has divulged the fact in a letter written to the Morning Star, to contradict a report that 'the great scandal' has been arranged. And now, in leaving this case, I would warn your readers not to prejudge it. As at present advised, and after due reflection upon the improbabilities—I had almost said the impossibilities—which have presented themselves before me, I have come to the conclusion, provisionally, that there must be some tremendous mistake or diabolical roguery somewhere behind this case. The political opponents of the noble Lord—or rather the baser sort of them—are all on the alert, erectis auribus, snuffing the wind, and already, in anticipation, tasting the sweets of office; for, of course, as the Standard puts it, 'unless the charge be repelled—as we anxiously trust will be the result—there can be no question as to the course which Her Majesty will feel it necessary to adopt. In that event, equally as a matter of course, political changes must be expected.' Exactly so! With the fall of Atlas the whole Whig world will rush down into irretrievable ruin, and the Conservative chiefs will be sent for, and the good time which has been so long in coming will come at last. Let not, however, the hopeful waiters on Providence, whose supreme ambition is to carry a box into the House of Commons at a cost of £1,200 to the country, count their chickens before they're hatched. For my part, I would not give them the amount of a month's salary of a junior lord for all the benefits they hope to extract out of this business. No, no! It cannot be! I will not believe it for a moment. The star of the noble lord, I feel convinced, is not destined to be thus ignominiously quenched."

A correspondent of Saunders News Letter writes under date of London, Nov. 7:

"The rumor which described the plaintiff in the cause of O'KEEFE vs. O'KEEFE and PALMERSTON as a clergyman of the Established Church proves to have been incorrect. He is, as I have now ascertained on reliable authority, a member of the Catholic Church, and some years since kept a school at Killarney. He became connected with the Kerry Star, and on the demise of that short-lived journal came over to London with the object, no doubt, of bettering his fortunes. I do not presume to prejudice the case, but I may state that but one opinion is entertained here in regard to the matter. That opinion is that there is no foundation whatever for the charge against Lord PALMERSTON. The lady waited on him, it is true, at Cambridge House, with a memorial or prayer for assistance, and the noble lord received her with the courtesy and kindness which belong to his nature. He also, I have been given to understand, assisted her with his purse, and in this wise, and this alone, qualified himself for the unenviable position of co-respondent—which he now occupies."

ANOTHER CASE.

A London correspondent of the Belfast News Letter writes:

"I may inform you that another remarkable case is likely to occupy the attention of the Court of Divorce, in which another member of the Government will figure as a correspondent. The honorable gentleman in question is not a member of the Cabinet, although he may be ranked among the foremost occupants of the Treasury Bench. He entered Parliament a few years ago as a Radical, thoroughly independent, of course, and ready to resent any advances on the part of ministers as an offence against his personal honor and consistency. Very soon, however, he exchanged his seat below the gangway for the Treasury Bench, where his fierce attacks upon private members, and coarse and reckless vituperation when defending the Government, have combined to make him one of the most unpopular of the motley team which Lord PALMERSTON endeavors so unceasingly to keep quiet. The name of this gentleman in connection with certain proceedings now pending in the Court of Divorce is freely mentioned, but the present stage of the proceedings is not desirable to refer to particulars. It may, however, be right to state that the correspondent is unmarried.

A FEARFUL TRAGEDY.

A MOTHER AND TWO CHILDREN MURDERED IN A CAB—DETECTION, ARREST AND SUICIDE OF THE MURDERER.

Quite a sensation has been created in London by the perpetration of a fearful murder of a woman and two children in a cab in the public streets. The circumstances of the discovery are thus described by one of the witnesses at the Coroner's inquest:

"The landlord of the Green Dragon public house, in Bishopgate-street, says he perfectly well recollects PARRY, the cabman, coming into his house on Saturday night and being served with the half-and-half, and himself with three halfpenny worth of gin, as before reported. Before he (the cabman) took the beer out he asked for the change. The landlord told him that his practice was to give the change when the pot was brought back. With this the cabman took the beer out, and as he was out some considerable time, the landlord went out with the 7½d. change, and gave it to the cabman, who handed back the pot. The landlord then saw the man inside the cab, and should be able to identify him again. When the cabman opened the door at the Royal Oak, he saw the woman and the two children huddled at the bottom, one on the top of the other. He says his first impression was that they had been drinking more freely than he had at first imagined. He shook the woman, but as she did not move, he took the smallest child in his arms and found it quite stiff. He dropped it again and jumped back into the middle of the pavement, where he stood frenzied with horror. The Royal Oak being a place of great traffic, the passers-by seeing the cabman in such a state, ran to the cab and the truth became apparent that all were dead. Mr. HENRY KEATINGE, a Surgeon, of Princes-street, Westbourne-grove, seeing the crowd, alighted from an omnibus, and after examining the bodies ordered their immediate removal to hospital. The house-surgeon of the hospital in his evidence stated that he smelt the mouths of the mother and the youngest child, and the smell of prussic acid was particularly strong in them. That smell was less marked in the older child. There was no spasm about the bodies. He examined the eyes of the mother, and the pupils were not contracted. There was nothing remarkable about the eyes of the others. Some froth came from the mouth of the mother, which had an intense smell of prussic acid, and also smell of alcohol. He had assisted the deceased to the post-mortem table. The clothes they wore were brought in, and he found a phial under one of the children, and also in the arm of the mother. A bottle, which was found in her pocket, was partially full of water and for the smell of prussic acid. The contents of the bottle were given to a dog, which died in about half an hour. The post-mortem examination took place forty-hours after death. The brain was congested, and the intestines smelt strongly of prussic acid. There was about half an ounce of fluid in the bag of the heart, which healthy. Never nothing observable. The stomach had not been opened. The kidneys much congested. The other organs were healthy. He smelt prussic acid in opening the child, but very slightly. In the youngest child there was a much stronger smell of prussic acid. The age of the woman appeared about thirty-five years, the elder child about seven years, and the younger child about four years. He assumed that the woman was the mother of the children, as she bore signs indicative of parturition, and the sign of a ring on the finger. There was a striking likeness between the mother and children.

The following telegram dated London, Nov. 11, gives the denouement of the fearful tragedy: "The police having succeeded in discovering that the husband of the woman and father of the children who were found poisoned in a cab on Saturday night, was a person named Hunt, in the employ of Mr. CULLOCH, a wholesale druggist, at the west end, proceeded to HUNT's residence in Cold Bath-square, Clerkenwell-street. They were unable, for some time, to obtain admission, but at length the door was opened by Hunt, who was the only person in the house. Soon after the police were admitted, Hunt was seized with a severe vomiting; he was then conveyed to the police station, where he replied to a number of questions which leave no doubt that he and his wife did not live happily together. He persisted in saying that he and the children had been to Southampton. After a short time Hunt became so ill that he was unable to give further replies, and he died in about an hour after being taken to the police station. The cabman who took the parties from Shoreditch, on Saturday, is not able to identify Hunt. The person whom he took up on Saturday wore a moustache. Hunt while at the station made some allusion to a person who appears to have visited his wife clandestinely, and who, he described, had shaved off his whiskers, leaving a moustache. Aconite was found in Hunt's body. Another account says, Hunt obtained permission of his employers to take a holiday on Saturday, and he was accordingly absent. On Monday he returned to business, and took his round as traveler during the day, and nothing particular was noticed in his manner."

AUTHORIZED COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE.

From the London Guardian.

We are happy to see that the objections brought against certain portions of the Bible are about to be met by leading theologians of the Church of England in a very practical way. If a false and unfair system of interpretation has been applied to the text of Scripture, the best way of confuting it is to apply a true and legitimate one. The honor of originating the plan is due to the Speaker of the House of Commons, who consulted several of the Bishops on the subject, and the Archbishop of York, in his diocese, undertook to organize a plan for producing a commentary which should "place the reader in full possession of whatever information may be requisite to enable him to understand the Word of God, and supply him with satisfactory answers to objections resting upon misrepresentation of its contents." The plan has received the sanction of the Primate. A committee, consisting of the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of London, Lichfield, Llandaff, Gloucester and Bristol, Lord Lyttleton, the Speaker, Mr. Walpole, Drs. Jacobson and Jeremie, takes the general supervision of the work. Rev. F. C. Cook, preacher at Lincoln's Inn, will be the general editor, and will advise with the Archbishop of York and the Regius Professors of Divinity at Oxford and Cambridge upon any questions which may arise. The work will be divided into eight sections, the first of which will consist of the Pentateuch, a difficult subject, and will be edited by Prof. Harold Browne, Revs. R. C. Facconer, T. T. Thrupp, T. E. Espin, and W. Dewhurst, contributing. The historical books will be consigned to Rev. G. Rawlinson, editor, and Revs. T. E. Espin and Lord Arthur Hervey, contributors. Rev. F. C. Cook will edit, and Revs. E. H. Plumptre, W. T. Bullock and T. Kingsbury will annotate, the poetical books. The four Great Prophets will be undertaken by Dr. M'Caul as editor, and by Revs. R. Payne Smith and H. Ross as contributors. The Bishop of St. David's and the Rev. R. Gandell will edit the twelve Minor Prophets, and the Revs. E. Huxtable, W. Drake, and E. Meyrick will contribute. The Gospels and Acts will form the sixth section; the first three Gospels will be edited by Prof. Mansel, the Gospel of St. John by the Dean of Canterbury, and the Acts by Dr. Jacobson. The editorship of St. Paul's Epistles is appropriately assigned to Bishop Ellicott and Dr. Jeremie, with Dr. Gilloys, Prof. T. Evans, Rev. J. Waite, and Prof. J. Lightfoot as contributors. To the Archbishop-elect of Dublin and the Master of Balliol is assigned the rest of the sacred canon. This really promises to be a work second only in importance to the LXX., or the English version made by the order of King JAMES. Perhaps it will be quoted as "the LXX." The names of the editors and contributors, while they insure orthodoxy, give promise that the comment thus put forth almost with the sanction of the Church of England as a body will not be the utterance of any narrow school or section of it.

A WAR PANAMORA.

From the London Herald.

On Saturday evening a private view was given at St. James Hall of a moving panorama, illustrative of the principal warlike operations which have taken place since the commencement of the civil war in America. This historical panorama has been produced under the direction of Mr. CARMES, whose fame as a painter of American scenery has been previously well established; but what part he has taken in these scenes it is impossible to decide, as the programme states them to be "the united labor of American and European artists." The exhibition is divided into three sections, and the number of pictures presented is about forty. Although they generally represent battles, sieges, marches and naval engagements, an evident effort has been made to relieve the sameness unavoidable in such subjects. In the first section, the Bull Run retreat is boldly illustrated by several horsemen coming full gallop toward the spectator; the anxiety of one of them to be out of harm's way far exceeds the speed of his horse or his skill in horsemanship—his seat and his saddle have parted company—and it is evident that in another minute he will beat them both by a length, his own—in the middle of the road. By his side runs an officer with his drawn sabre in his hand, which seems an absurd incumbrance for a man in full flight. This section concludes by a numerous scene at Beaufort, in which one distributed accompanies his song on the piano-forte, and others are lying about on sofas, being fanned by negro boy. In the second section there is an interesting episode entitled, "Seeking for the Dead." It is a moonlight scene, very imposing in its effect and admirably painted. Other scenes are introduced, in which picturesque costumes, local customs or the effects of war, form the principal features. The earlier subjects are the best executed as works of art, but those which follow, particularly where cavalry is engaged, if not either so correctly drawn or so skilfully painted, perhaps gain in dash and fury what they lose in accuracy of detail and proportion; but the interest in this exhibition will be found in the apparently truthful representations—said to be from photographs—of the forts, towns and other localities which have become generally known through the accounts constantly received from America. For this reason the panorama will possess a certain degree of attraction, but we would suggest that a short description, with an occasional anecdote or remark, be added to the mere naming of the scene as it appears, and in that way the pause between the music and the rolling on of a fresh view would be advantageously filled up, and increase the amusement of the audience.

THE GREAT EASTERN.

On the 11th, Capt. W. PATON, whilst addressing the members of the Mercantile Marine Association in reference to the plan for repairing the big ship, mentioned a singular occurrence which took place at New-York. An impression got abroad that the ship was haunted, the alleged ghost being no other than the impersonation of an unfortunate rivetter, who was heard plying his avocation in one of the wells or compartments. Capt. PATON stated that before the vessel left this country he believed that one of the men employed in her construction was missing. The man was salvation; he was missed from the ship and never came for his wages, the supposition being that he had been rivetted up in some part of the vessel. So firmly impressed were some of the men with this idea that they left the ship in consequence. They affirmed that they had heard their departed friend busily engaged rivetting in the middle of the night. The story was believed by many persons in New-York, and on one occasion while the ship was under repair a gun signaled to be drawn up. It appeared pale with fright, and declared the ghost of the rivetter was busy in the bottom part of the ship; in fact, that he began rivetting immediately over his head. Such was the consternation amongst the divers that they called in the aid of one of the spirit mediums, who are somewhat numerous in the City of New-York. The medium came on board the ship, and after an examination declared that the missing man was there both "in body and spirit." Fortunately he (Capt. PATON) by pure accident was enabled to dispel the illusion. Being in a boat near the bows of the ship, he discovered that a swivel connected with the moorings worked to and fro, the movement causing a clink or whack, which at dense, were especially at night, was heard throughout the vessel. It was this sound which had conjured up, in connection with the supposed fate of the unfortunate rivetter, the phantom whose mysterious doings spread such consternation on board the big ship.

THE KEARSAGE.

From the Manchester Examiner.

A correspondent of QUESTIONS we doubts the correctness of the report that the Captain of the Federal steamer KEARSAGE took on board a number of men as stokers, and that he threatened to shoot the orders for his departure. On the contrary, he complied with the utmost promptness with the request in the dispatch of Admiral Sir LEWIS KOSSE. A number of the officers were that evening at the theatre in Cork, and a party of them intended to pay a visit to Queen's College and museum, in the course of the following day. Warning was given that they had been wanted on board, but they did not, and the ship departed.

A BLOCKADE RUNNER.

From the North British Mail, Nov. 20.

Yesterday there left the Clyde the Will of the Wisp, a fine public steamer of 600 tons and 150 horse power, launched on the 27th ult. from the London Works, Renfrew, and which run eighteen miles an hour on the trial trip with 300 tons dead weight on board. She has been bought by some enterprising persons to run the American blockade.

The Pope and the Poor.

The Vorsehe of Rome, of the 31st ult., gives the following particulars of the fourth series of guests whom the Holy Father invited to dine at the Vatican during the usual Roman October vacation: "The day before yesterday, being the last Thursday in October, the Holy Father, Pope Pius IX., from a motive of that paternal affection which so well characterizes him and makes him day by day more beloved, by and endeared to his subjects and to the whole Catholic world, wished to recreate by a special banquet in the halls of the Vatican a number of poor, choosing one from each of the parishes of Rome. They met first at the Church of St. James, on the Piazza Scossia Cavalli, and having all together ventured the 'Blessed Sacrament,' they assumed in procession to the Apostolic Palace, where, on arriving, they were received in the Sala Ducale, where the table had been laid for them. At 11 o'clock struck they duly honored the Blessed Virgin by reciting the Angelus, and after a prelude had blessed the table they sat down full of joy at the honor they were made to share. Toward the beginning of the dinner His Holiness made his appearance amongst them, surrounded with all the Prelates of Court. The exultation and wonder of that group of poor men on seeing themselves in presence of the Sovereign Pontiff may be easily imagined. The Holy Father, with his well-known benignity, went slowly along the whole table, noticing everything with interest, and addressing each of the guests with loving words. Having then taken his stand at the top of the hall, he addressed them a moving discourse, exhorting them especially to attend to giving to their families a good education, the neglect of which is a source of innumerable evils to body and soul. After having thus fed their souls also with the food of words of eternal life, he returned again to his poor guests, giving to each one with his own hand alms in money. Not was he satisfied with all this, but would have them also treated to a bottle of good wine, that they might on that day of recreation enjoy themselves in a manner worthy of them. He himself to take home to give their children what was left on the table. The dinner was excellent and abundant, the emotion was general, and the enthusiasm *of the poor guests indescribable, their voices re-*echoing over and over again in that hall blessings on the incomparable Pontiff and affectionate Sovereign."

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A London correspondent of the Belfast News Letter writes: "Mr. EDWIN JAMES, Q. C., and M. P., filled a prominent place before the public a year or two since. A counsel learned in the law, and a member of Parliament to boot, was compelled to abandon the scene of his legal and senatorial triumphs, and to fly the country, an outcast from society. Fortune, the fickle goddess, who frowned upon her votary in the Old World, smiles blandly upon him in the New. He is now about to be married to an American lady with a dower of £200,000. A portion of this wealth is, I understand, about to find its way to England in satisfaction of those debts which Mr. JAMES feels to be his first duty to discharge. With this view he has requested the presence of his solicitor in New-York to arrange matters, and this gentleman (Mr. HENRY RICHARDS, of Langham-street, a highly respectable practitioner,) is now in New-York making the necessary arrangements for putting his client 'straight before the world.' So you see there is always a future for those who have the energy to repent and the grace to atone. It is to be hoped that the bride's fortune is not invested in 'greenbacks.'"

—In a letter which Mr. LAING addressed to Capt. COLES, on Oct. 29, the honorable gentleman says: "I beg to say that in the speech I made at Birkenhead, on Friday last, I intended to convey to the public my conviction that, unless the Admiralty allow the vessels they are fitting with your cupolas to be properly masted and rigged, they would not be doing justice to your invention. I may add, that I have myself no doubt whatever that vessels properly designed and fitted with your cupolas will prove most efficient sea-going ships for service in any part of the world. The American iron-clad monitors have hitherto been built for river and coast service, and are not adapted for regular sea-going work. They cannot, therefore, be at all classed with the ships you have been urging this country for so long a time to adopt."

—The Courrier des Alpes relates the following instance of the danger of premature interment: "A few days ago, the family and friends of M. TAYTOT, a landowner, residing at St. Christophe, (Isere,) who had, to all appearance, died suddenly, followed him to his last home. Divine service was being performed in the church, when a singular noise was heard proceeding from the coffin. The service was immediately suspended, the lid uncovered, and the supposed dead man found to be alive. He was conveyed back to his house, and on the following day he was able to move about."

—A European traveler, with Russian passport and credentials from French, Austrian, Prussian and English Consuls, has lately passed through India, and gone viâ Kapoorthalla to Calcutta. He has traveled from St. Petersburgh, through Moscow, by Astracan and Central Asia to Cashmere and the Punjab. He calls himself a Greek, and goes by the name of GEORGE CONSTANTINE. He speaks many languages, French with particular fluency, and has a good stock of plans, maps, &c., of the whole country he has traveled over. He had an interview with the Maharajah of Cashmere.

—An anecdote is in circulation about King GEORGE's Danish mentor, M. BRUNNOW, indicative of that gentleman's promptness of decision when thwarted by minute regulations. On his late passage by packet from Copenhagen to Hamburg, his dog was dashed overboard. Stoppage of the ship was refused on the ground that mere animals were not entitled to rescue, the by-laws only applying to "passengers or crew." In a twinkling Brunnow jumped overboard and claimed for self and dog benefit of the launch boat.

—The expected début of the Countess BATHYANI, of the well-known Hungarian family, whose beauty and talent have been for some time the theme of conversation in Paris, took place a few days ago at the Théâtre de la Tour d'Auvergne. She selected RACINE's tragedy of "Phedre" for her first appearance, and assumed the principal character. The Countess is said to seek in a theatrical career a compensation for the loss of a splendid fortune. This circumstance attracted some of the most distinguished of the fashionable world.

—Scriptural Paraphrases by a Layman is the title of a book announced for publication in Edinburgh, and now being printed at the Caledonian Press there. When completed it will consist of some 600 pages. It has been the author's constant labor, he says, for some twenty years; and his object has been to "elucidate one passage of Scripture by quoting the biblical words from another portion of Holy Writ, and thus giving the whole commentary in pure Bible language."

—MEYERBEER's long expected opera, "L'Africaine," which, it is said, has been written upwards of fifteen years, and destined for the National Opera of Paris, but waiting for the requisite vocalists, is now again the subject of conversation in musical circles—a rumor having got abroad that the work is likely to be produced for the first time at Covent Garden, instead of the French metropolis, and that the singers will probably be ADELINA PATTI, LUCCA, TAMBERLIK and NAUDIN.

—The Messager du Midi states that the Empress of the French, before leaving Toulon, ordered a list of twelve convicts to be made out, for the purpose of procuring them pardons or diminutions of punishment. Six are to be taken from among the most deserving of the Arabs, because of the longing which they feel to again revisit their native country.

—The following communication has been transmitted from Warsaw to Breslaw: The superior of the Augustinian Convent, KRALIEWSKI, and the prior of the same, PAWLOWSKI, who made declarations favorable to the conduct of the Russians, have been assassinated with strychnine. The first is dead, and the second is seriously ill.

—MRS. ELIZABETH MURRAY, an accomplished member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colors, has left Teneriffe, where she long resided, and whence she derived the subjects of her pictures, and has taken up her residence in the Northern American States, in consequence of Mr. MURRAY's appointment as Consul for Portland.

—The Signale, of Leipsic, informs its readers that "The Africaine," of which so much has been spoken in Paris, was about to be produced in England, the director of Covent Garden having demanded that opera of MEYERBEER, and placed at his disposal for its interpretation Mlle. PATTI and LUCCA, M.M. TAMBERLIK, NAUDIN, and all the principal artists of his imposing company.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

THE PEACE PARTY IN THE NORTH.

From the Richmond Examiner, Nov. 24.

The few journals which still oppose a bold front to the Lincoln Government and denounce the war maintain that a large peace party exists in that country. They assert that the formidable minorities—if they were not, indeed, honest majorities—who voted for WOODWARD and VALLANDIGHAM, in Pennsylvania and Ohio, pronounced clearly in favor of peace. If this is a correct statement, and there is much, especially in the case of VALLANDIGHAM, to warrant the conviction that it is substantially true, we find a truly formidable body of opposition to a Government which still maintains the insignia of Republicanism and professes to rely confidently upon the cordial support of the people.

Few things are more difficult than accurately to ascertain the state of popular sentiment, when its free play has been interfered with by overruling and extraneous influences, or it has been subjected to powerful repression. Under such circumstances that power of self-organization and combination, by which its great moral effects are produced, are no longer possible. Every individual is withheld, by a sense of isolation, from thoroughly maturing his opinions, or restrained by fears from expressing what he conceives to be dangerous.

A free vote does not always, in such a condition of thought, fairly express the wishes of the people. Time and discussion are required to evolve from their hidden depths the final aims and purposes of [illegible] Rhetorical Fireworks, and Downright Humbug. But the present shows the mighty [illegible] The whole question is narrowed down to a personal issue between the man, whom the Yankees delight to honor, and the unwilling Southerners, who refuse to bow the knee to his assumed ascendancy of a nation. We do not [illegible] the indignation of the Southern people to a higher pitch; but it is a mistake to suppose that it should not have centered the choice of any of the parties—of Sawyer himself, the Oily Gammon of the Ocean, as well as of the senior Quirk and junior Snarl. Long before the Chicago Convention the line of battle were drawn up, and the selection of the Northern Eaglemen was a matter which did not affect in the slightest the enthusiasm of the conflict.

We were prepared to resist the domination of a contemptible majority, however respectable their leader. That they did not find a responsible leader, we know; but this was regarded only as a superfluous proof of the rottenness of their cause. Some now, of this late date, after all the blood that has been shed, after all the calamities wrung that has been done, after all the insult and outrage that have been heaped upon the Union, in order forsooth, that Mr. Lincoln may have the full enjoyment of the authority conferred upon him by the election of 1860. One would think that he had had enjoyment enough—enjoyment far better than submitted to his course before then if the South had submitted tamely to his rule. Well might he say with THEMISTOCLES, "Fortunate, not [illegible]." "I should have been patient had I not been robbed. I should not have had the full enjoyment of my authority had I not lost it." What would have been the reflection of the few Federal leaders [illegible] Have faint minds been given the [illegible] of Federal office-holders in the South-[illegible] every hour of the day from the morning unto the evening sacrifice? No incense [illegible] Yet, in spite of hostile overtures, a madman [illegible] to bestow on Jefferson Davis. True, in his own mode, he would have enjoyed the humiliation of the South; but where would have been the banquet of blood and the brimming beaker of tears? And yet, if we judge by the outgiving of his oracle, he is not satisfied. His cup of happiness is not full. So long as there is a homestead to be burned, an acre of land to be confiscated, a rebel to be annihilated, a piece of plate to be stolen, he is not content. The contract is not fulfilled—he has not the full enjoyment of the authority conferred upon him by the election of 1860. But is this the real meaning of this new utterance of his Lenten Apollo? We doubt it. It is not the broken promise of the election of 1860 that constitutes the grievance. It is the prospect of any election at all in 1864 that peoples the Yankee mind with fear of change. Not till Jupiter has overthrown the Titans will his real reign commence, and all before that overthrow goes for naught in the great Man of his rule. "There can be no peace and quiet until ABRAHAM LINCOLN is President under the election of 1860 of the whole United States." And when will that be? Who can tell? Meanwhile the President of the Northern States is to continue in office, and well the period when he can enter the promised land. The land warrant bears the date of 1860. We opine that the taxes will amount to more than the value of the property before he gets possession.

Oh! Jupiter of the North. You are unfortunate in the choice of your oracle. Apollo has blabbed the secret a little too soon, and we trouble for your lofty abodes—your White House—your Mount Olympus. And then the Titans are troublesome—are so stubborn—are so bent on asserting their original rights. Can you not hear the cry, Redeunt Saturnia regna?

THE CASE OF THE SIR WM. PEEL.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM CAPT. ROLANDO, OF THE SEMINOLE.

The Richmond Enquirer publishes the following correspondence, promising that "This Razzar Rolando is a South Carolinian by birth, and disappointed his friends very much by remaining with the enemies of his country. He was with Capt. PERSIAN in the expedition against the Chinese Pirates, and behaved very gallantly. Before the war his word would have stood against the oath of any Englishman, but the amount of lying done by his brother Yankees whence during the war makes it rather doubtful whether his word will pass now among gentlemen such is the effect of a association."

Hon. S. R. Mallory, Secretary Navy:

SIR: I have the honor to forward for your information a letter from Capt. ROLANDO, commanding U. S. steamer Seminole, to Mr. G. V. Fox, Assistant Secretary U. S. Navy. This letter was in the mail-bag of the Seminole, which, with that of the Cagnes, were intrusted to the Captain of a blockade runner, who deceived the Federals into the belief that he was bound for New-Orleans, and, on leaving them at Sabine Pass, ran into Calcasieu, and delivered the mails to an officer there, who transmitted them to these headquarters. The original has been sent to Mr. MASON, in London, for publication, one copy to the British Admiral commanding in the Gulf, and one to the Mexican authorities at the Rio Grande.

I am, very respectfully, your obd't servant,
J. BANKHEAD MAGRUDER,
Major-General Commanding.

LETTER OF CAPT. ROLANDO.

SABINE PASS, Oct. 5, 1863.
U. S. STEAMER SEMINOLE.

MY DEAR FOX: I am sorry that I have been ordered by the Commodore to blockade off this place, as I felt I could have been of more service at the Rio Grande, where I seized the Sir Wm. Peel, on the 11th of September.

I could understand the hocus pocus of those Englishmen there; they were in open daylight landing cargoes of contraband with the consentaneous of rebel guns, and sending into Texas everything they could which would aid the rebellion. I knew it, but could not detect the act; and consequently had to keep quiet until I had sufficient grounds for making the seizure I did.

The Sir Wm. Peel is about 240 feet long on deck, and has splendid engines, all below the water-line, and built for a man-of-war, iron stanchions and brace fore and aft on her main deck, and could be converted into a privateer on very short notice.

I expected to find guns on board, but did not, with the exception of two iron 12-pound guns. Of merchand articles, I found about 150 axles for gun carriages, and two casks of iron rings for artillery harness.

The vessel is perfectly ventilated with air ports, and would be comfortable for a crew of 400 men. She will make as a splendid single-cocked sloop, with pivot guns, raises the spar-deck.

No one knows, who has not been to the Rio Grande, the immense value that river is to the Southern Confederacy. Steamers are constantly landing cargoes—contraband—which go to Texas in the small steamers and barges which are towed up the river and landed; on returning, bringing cargoes of Confederate cotton—just as bad as contraband, as it buys the arms and munitions of war.

When I took the Peel she had steam up, and I thought she was going to run for it; so I took her at another, which I would not have preferred, as I feared the Englishman would cry out inhumanity, as he did; but I informed him that he was in error; that I had the advantage; he was on my side of the line; he was quite near the line, but a little to the northward.

I did not take any bearings myself of the position, as my instructions to the master are general, that "he should always take bearings when we stopped near the land." He did so while I was on board the Peel, as I seized her myself, and the day after the seizure I found that in the log was noted the bearing of the river Rio Grande, west by south, at the time of the seizure, which puts us a little in American waters.

I am glad it was done by the master, as I felt some delicacy about a point of so much interest, personally.

It galled me to have a secondrel of an Englishman crying out neutrality, when he knew as well as I did that he had been trafficking in the blood of my countrymen and making money out of our misfortunes. That he had landed arms and contraband (I know of every bale before my arrival, (I was only ten days at the Rio Grande,) and had started with the intention of being a privateer, and had so boasted in Matamoras, is well known, but the miserable Mexicans who are helping the thing, and yet will no doubt sustain a claim of neutrality, which they themselves are violating; for the Mexicans, the Cut, Lazenne and Peel are all intercepted their cargoes, which were contraband, and forwarded to Texas by Mexican authorities in the Custom-house.

When it is so palpable to any one of our statesmen that Mexicans are bearing, through the Custom-house of the Rio Grande, violating their neutrality by actually giving aid and comfort to the enemy, I think it doubly hard that any plea for the observance of a neutrality, which they don't observe themselves, should be turned to by our Government, and I regret Mr. SEWARD will remind them of what they are now doing, and have done in the way of violating neutrality, by sending to Texas contraband carried through the Rio Grande; it is as easy, as the river at the mouth is about three hundred yards wide, with four feet water on the bar, and grows narrower as you go up.

I think the Government should sustain my course, without listening to any plea of remonstrance from either English or Mexicans.

I do not write on account myself, for you know how I felt about the matter, but I do think that when the Mexicans have sinned, and what she calls neutrality, as it is the duty of a neutral to prevent, I have done my position when the field [illegible] I have taken it [illegible] fully sustained by my military, as the master who seized the ship, by hearings, in our own waters, so you see my reasoning is all right, and I can return the English vessel.

You saw from that English Capt. HOEY's dispatch how the rebel would act. Who is a pupil, I wonder if he recollected how his Consul, Mr. HUTSON, and some of his brother officers, raised the blockade of Charleston by an imaginary line of horses. I suppose the boundary of Texas and Mexico is one of the same to him; but I have one of HUMPHREY's compasses, which gives a bluster line than there.

I hope Mr. SEWARD will assume a higher law if the case comes before him, as Mexico and England are violating neutrality themselves, and what is noted out by them to us they should be made to feel in a similar way.

There is not enough doing here to keep me alive; I have been here about two weeks, and have not seen anything but what is in Sabine Pass, which the rebels are fortifying and piling across the channel.

I do not anticipate anything in the way of a fight here, unless the Clifton, Sachem and the cotton boats in the Pass come out and make one.

The Clifton is in working order. I can't get near them, as there is only seven feet water at the entrance of the Pass.

The army will attack, I suppose, from some other point than the Pass, as it is stronger now than ever.

I trust, my dear Fox, you will drop me a line and tell me how the course I have pursued, as regards the Peel, is considered by the department; for I am really quite anxious at the responsibility I have assumed, particularly when I think of HUNTER, who I have understood, was charged with violation neutrality. The Englishmen will do any amount of swearing, and the Mexicans likewise from complicity.

My consciousness of having acted to the best of my ability for the interest of my country and its cause, the belief that the vessel was in American waters, and the correct course I pursued in the matter, are the sources of the comfort I have in my anxiety, and on which I rest my defence.

Drop me a line soon, and believe me your friend,

A true copy,
HENRY ROLANDO.
W. A. ATERON, Captain A. A. General.

THE TOPOGRAPHY OF LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN

The army correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch gives the following very excellent description of Lookout Mountain, which possesses peculiar interest at this time:

"The ascent of Lookout Mountain is gained by an excellent road that rises from the confluence of Chattanooga Creek, two miles west of the depot at Chattanooga, and reaches the top of the mountain a mile in rear of the Lookout hotel. There we found a most excellent Summer resort, resembling in appearance a fashionable watering place, with beautiful and commodious hotel buildings, and all else to render the place attractive to seekers of pleasure. Fine chalybeate springs are also flowing in profusion. This beautiful village is known by the appellation of Summer Town. There is quite a commanding view from the fourth floor of the hotel; but the sublimest scenery is spread out before the beholder from the huge boulders of rock that rise so rough and rugged from the extreme northeast point of the mountain overlooking the Tennessee River. This peak we suppose to be near three miles from Chattanooga, on an air line, direction nearly west, elevation near two thousand feet above the river.

The general course of the Tennessee River flows from the northeast to the southwest, but just from Lookout, the shape of the river from above Chattanooga to Brown's Ferry below the mountain, is somewhat similar to the letter S, Chattanooga being in the Southern bend and Moccasin Ridge in the northern. The abruptness of the lower bend, however, is better represented by the name of Moccasin Bend. The beholder is struck with the similarity of the neck of land embraced by this bend to an Indian's moccasin. Chattanooga is the instep, the confluence of Chattanooga Creek is the toe, and the confluence of Lookout Creek the heel, and the pontoon bridge at Brown's Ferry the ankle above the heel. The shrubbery along the river bank represents the fringe or beads of the moccasin. Lookout is opposite the bottom of the foot, and Moccasin Ridge is the leg and foot. The batteries that fire so frequently upon us, may be styled the top of the toe. The distance from the pontoon bridge in the rear of Chattanooga, across the ankle of Moccasin Ridge, to the pontoon at Brown's Ferry, is apparently about a mile, while around the river it is five or six miles. From the stand point we occupied, Missionary Ridge is seen extending from north to south, three miles southeast of and fronting Chattanooga. Chattanooga Valley and Creek are between Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain.

Lookout Valley and Creek are west of Lookout Mountain, and between it and Raccoon Mountain, which is five miles beyond the Peak. Walden's Ridge is on the opposite side of the river nearly north. Between Raccoon Mountain and Walden's Ridge is the passage of the river, with the 'suck' and 'boiling pot.' The Federals now hold the Raccoon Mountain and the valley of Chattanooga beyond Chattanooga Creek."

HIS VIEWS ON THE ASPECT OF AFFAIRS.

In response to an invitation from the Georgia Legislature, Hon. THOMAS BUTLER KING delivered an address before them on the state of the country. The following are some of the remedies suggested by him:

He had been amazed that the Provisional Congress had not purchased a navy adequate to the work of keeping our ports open, whereby we might have exported our surplus produce and bought supplies. He had himself advised such a purchase. Such a navy could have been provided for $10,000,000 capable of coping with the boasted Yankee navy in the work of defending certain desired points. We had been deprived, through this neglect of the Congress, of $200,000,000, which our cotton, rice and tobacco would have brought, aside from the loss incurred in negroes and the destruction of property along our coast and navigable streams.

He thought a grave error was committed, after failing to provide for the sale of our products, in not providing for taxation adequate to meet the expenses of the Government. If Congress doubted the constitutionality of a direct tax before an apportionment was had—which he did not—they should have provided for the apportionment. They had not done this, and the currency had gone down until—when at length a tax bill was framed—it contained a clause declaring that gold should be taxed eight for one, thus virtually depreciating its own currency 800 per cent.

Our Government had made a great mistake in not buying the cotton at ten cents a pound and holding it as a basis for foreign credit. It would now bring us about $600,000,000 in gold, or enough to pay our entire war debt. He had recommended this policy.

He recommended that the cotton now in the country be taxed twenty-five cents per pound. This, he estimated, would raise $375,000,000. It could not be objected to by the speculators, for they have been made rich by the misfortunes of the country, or by the planters, whose products have been enhanced so much in value.

He would further, in accordance with the maxim that the consumer pays the tax, levy an export duty of five cents per pound on cotton at the conclusion of peace, or when the ports are opened. This would bring us $75,000,000. The interest on the public debt of $1,000,000,000 would be $70,000,000. Then, on all exports he would levy a duty sufficient to raise $15,000,000. This would give us a sinking fund of $20,000,000, which would pay the debt in twenty-two years. Then, to support the Government, he would have a revenue or import duty of twenty-five per cent. Estimating our imports at half the exports—$150,000,000—that would give us $37,000,000 to pay the expenses of the Government.

RICHMOND MARKETS.

From the Enquirer, Nov. 20.

MERCHANDISE—Whilst flour and wheat continue very scarce, the receipts of various other articles of subsistence have been more liberal this week, and business has, consequently, been somewhat brisker. The remark in our last that adequate supplies will not be received until the Secretary of War gives peremptory instructions to impressing agents that they must release, unconditionally, one-half, or some other proportion of the stocks in farmers' hands which they have unjustly and improperly impressed subject to their orders, indicates the only mode of relief from the scarcity of provisions which will prove efficient.

Corn has been arriving more freely, and sales at as low a figure as $12 are reported. The current price is $14. The majority of sellers are asking $15 to $16 per bushel for corn meal. A lot was offered to consumers to-day by Messrs. TABBY & WILLIAMS at $14 per bushel. It was sent to them for sale by Mr. E. H. GUZ.

Hay is now selling at $12 per 100 pounds.

Apples tend upward, the supply being inadequate. We quote at $50 to $60 per barrel. (N. B.—Apples are not subject to impressment.)

Irish potatoes $9 to $10 per bushel, sweet potatoes $12 to $15.

Bacon, $2 75 per pound for hog round; butter firm at $3 75; lard, $2 50 to $2 60; fresh beef is abundant, and the apprehension is felt that supplies are coming in too rapidly. We quote at 70c. to 80c.; mutton, 70c.; veal, 80c.

Dressed poultry, $1 per pound—plentiful.

Sugar is firm at $9 to $9 25; sorghum molasses has advanced on account of the light receipts—now held at $12. Rice, 30c. per pound; salt lowers—30c. to 40c. per pound—market overstocked.

The receipts of tobacco are very light, and the market continues animated. We quote inferior lugs at $17 to $20; good, $25 to $30; fine bright, $35 to $40; inferior leaf, $25 to $35; good, $60 to $75; fine manufacturing, $100 to $200; good and fine shipping, $65 to $80.

Whisky is selling at all prices, from $50 to $75; apple brandy from $40 to $60. There is more offering, but holders are firm.

A correspondent of the Charleston Courier, writing from Wilmington, under date of the 11th inst., says:

"Blockade goods are tumbling down with a crash. The last auction sale I attended was on the 10th inst., when prices fell more than 75 per cent. below those realized at the preceding one. I am not at all surprised at this seemingly extraordinary change. There are here, now no less than fifteen entire cargoes—were recently waiting a change in the market. The result may, in a great measure, be attributed to the large stocks already in the hands of speculators, but much is also due to the causes which have stimulated home manufactures."

DEFERRED THANKSGIVING SERMONS.

Sermon by Rev. Abel Stevens in the New-York [illegible] Church, on Thirty-fifth-street, on Thanksgiving.

"O give thanks unto the Lord; for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever." Ps. cxx.

It is good for any people, at any time, truly to thank our Heavenly Father for his blessings. And I would that the whole people of the United States, each and all, North and South, could this day render root thanksgiving and praise to the Lord for his merciful kindness, at all times, to every individual. For then this day's sun would go down upon the wrath of no man or woman of the land. A new sphere of thought and feeling would parade Columbia. The voice of every citizen would be silent. Every sword would be sheathed. All armed hands fall. Every shackle would be broken. Disloyal men would be making restitution for their treason. The soldiers would be returning to the embrace of their families; and peace on earth and good will toward men would be the nation's anthem.

Yet, when we come to the civil and belligerent nations of our country, we need further light, in order to render thanks understandingly for partial events. We can thank the Lord for his general Providence over the affairs of the nation, and confidently hope and pray that the rebellion may cease and all our difficulties may be settled in the best possible way for the good of all mankind. The festivals and rites among the Israelitish ceremonials were appointed by the Lord, as representatives of spiritual reality. The Englishmen will do any amount of swearing, and the Mexicans likewise from complicity.

My consciousness of having acted to the best of my ability for the interest of my country and its cause, the belief that the vessel was in American waters, and the correct course I pursued in the matter, are the sources of the comfort I have in my anxiety, and on which I rest my defence.

Drop me a line soon, and believe me your friend,

THE TOPOGRAPHY OF LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN

The army correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch gives the following very excellent description of Lookout Mountain, which possesses peculiar interest at this time:

"The ascent of Lookout Mountain is gained by an excellent road that rises from the confluence of Chattanooga Creek, two miles west of the depot at Chattanooga, and reaches the top of the mountain a mile in rear of the Lookout hotel. There we found a most excellent Summer resort, resembling in appearance a fashionable watering place, with beautiful and commodious hotel buildings, and all else to render the place attractive to seekers of pleasure. Fine chalybeate springs are also flowing in profusion. This beautiful village is known by the appellation of Summer Town. There is quite a commanding view from the fourth floor of the hotel; but the sublimest scenery is spread out before the beholder from the huge boulders of rock that rise so rough and rugged from the extreme northeast point of the mountain overlooking the Tennessee River. This peak we suppose to be near three miles from Chattanooga, on an air line, direction nearly west, elevation near two thousand feet above the river.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The recent brilliant operations of Gen. GRANT'S army are more fully detailed in a dispatch which we publish this morning, from Gen. MEIGS to Secretary STANTON. Every additional report seems to magnify the brilliancy of the victory, and to add to its substantial fruits.

We get no news this morning from the Army of the Potomac. Our Washington dispatches say that none had been received at Headquarters of the army. Let us accept the silence as an omen that Gen. MEADE and his troops who are animated by a spirit that insures success, are rapidly pushing on until they are beyond easy communicating distance with the capital.

A dispatch from Cincinnati announces the escape of the notorious guerrilla, JOHN MORGAN, and six of his officers, from the Columbus, Ohio, jail. They managed to get free on Friday night, by digging through the flooring of their cell to a sewer leading to the river. A reward has been offered for their recapture.

There is a provoking reticence respecting the position of BURNSIDE'S army. The assurance that on the 23d inst. it was "satisfactory" is gratifying, but, after all, the public is nervously anxious to hear more. There is good reason to believe, however, that GRANT, as soon as he got BRAGG on the run, at once dispatched a corps to BURNSIDE'S relief, and the probabilities are that LONGSTREET has been cut to pieces.

Gen. GRANT, in his latest telegram to the War Department, states that he would pursue the Confederates to Red Clay. Red Clay is a small post village of Whitepine County, Ga., about twenty-eight or thirty miles due east of Lookout Mountain, and very near the Georgia and Tennessee boundary line. It is some sixteen miles north of Dalton, on a branch of the Tennessee Railroad, and is so situated that, with our forces occupying it, LONGSTREET'S apparently last chance for rejoining BRAGG—if he is desirous of doing so—is manifestly gone.

A letter received in Boston, dated Bermuda, Nov. 17, announces the arrival at that port of the rebel steamer Sumter, from Wilmington, N. C., with 350 bales of cotton. She reports that four steamers from Bermuda and Nassau have been captured off Wilmington, within a short time. The Sumter is painted black, and is bound to Liverpool to receive an outfit, and resume her old trade of pirating.

FROM EUROPE.

We publish this morning an interesting budget of foreign news received by the Arabia via Boston, being the details of what came epitomized over the wires from Halifax. Among the latest items are accounts from St. Petersburgh, which state that in well informed circles the belief is held that Russia will now be less disposed to consent to the proposed Congress than she would have been some months ago, as the situation in the interval has greatly changed. The statement that Russia has assented must therefore be regarded as quite premature, if not entirely devoid of foundation. The Russian papers publish an Imperial ukase, ordering the formation of twelve new regiments of infantry, each containing four battalions, to form the Third reserve corps. In France the former custom of the Emperor's Ministers to meet every Friday, at a dinner given by each in turn, which during the Summer has not been observed, was to be regularly resumed on the 13th, and the Minister of State was to be the host at the first meeting. The Yellow Book, containing the diplomatic documents, was to have been distributed on the 14th to the members of the Senate and the Legislative body. The latest bulletin respecting the health of the King of Denmark is dated Copenhagen, Nov. 14. It says: "The erysipelas spread yesterday over the King's whole face, with increasing fever, and continued with slight delirium. No accession of the erysipelas took place last night. Having obtained a little sleep, His Majesty is rather better to-day."

GENERAL NEWS.

The identity of the dead soldier who was found on the bloody field of Gettysburgh, with the picture of his three pretty little children tightly clasped in his hands, has been ascertained within a day or two. The wide publicity given to the touching circumstance through the medium of the Press, produced the desired result. The name of the deceased was HUMMERSON, and his widow and three children reside at Portville, Cattaraugus County, New-York.

PETER E. SLOCUM, a former employe of the Bath Hotel at Long Branch, was executed in the Monmouth County Jail, at Freehold, N. J., on Friday, for the murder of his wife by shooting in July last. The wretched man denied his guilt, but expressed himself resigned to his fate, which he met with remarkable fortitude. It was proved on the trial that he was in love with his wife's sister, ADDIE CRAIG, with whom he had been on terms of improper intimacy, and this was the supposed motive to the murder.

President LINCOLN was confined to his room by illness on Wednesday and Thursday of last week. A dispatch, dated yesterday, says that he is convalescent.

The Boston Traveller states that Lieut. COLEMAN and twenty privates, (colored,) captured in Louisiana recently, were hung by the rebels. They belonged to Gen. ULLMAN'S brigade, and were captured on a reconnoissance to Jackson, La., by Col. LOGAN'S rebel cavalry.

Breadstuffs were in more demand on Saturday, at firmer prices, as were also the principal kinds of provisions generally, at steady rates. Cotton was depressed and unsettled. Whiskey was quiet. Rio Coffee was in moderate request, as were likewise, Fish, Hides, Hay, Hops, Fruit, Salt, and Tobacco. Freights were inactive.

TRADE IN MISSOURI.—There has been almost a total cessation, throughout the State of Missouri of late, in the work of arson and murder which rebel bushwhackers and guerrillas have carried on for the last two years. Had since the rebellion broke out has the State enjoyed such a degree of quiet. This is doubtless owing in part to the fact that some of the local rebel leaders, such as PRICE and MARMADUKE, have been driven out of the State and far south of the Arkansas River, while others, like JOHN, THOMPSON, have been caught and caged, and still others have repented them of their evil ways. But due credit must also be given to the policy of firmness and conciliation adopted by the commander of the Department, Gen. SCOFIELD. He has not scrupled, on occasion, to issue orders as stringent and severe as have been issued by any General in the field, as witness his various orders and measures concerning bush whackers and steamboat burners, but he has not embroiled himself nor his army in the disputes between the various factions which have raged so fiercely and belligerently during the year, and he has avoided, so far as possible, every occasion and ground of quarrel. He has had a very difficult part to act; for his bitterest opponents have not been the avowed rebels, but those professedly loyal to the powers that be in Washington. The various factions have been at swords' points with each other, and it almost seemed at one time as if civil war between them could not be avoided. But Gen. SCOFIELD has succeeded not only in reducing the avowed rebels to peace and quietness, but in mollifying the fury of the factions, and calming the agitated passions of the hour. The victories won in the field secure honors and applause to our successful Generals, but the more laborious and harassing, and not less successful efforts of administrators like Gen. SCOFIELD, also demand recognition from a patriotic people and a well-served Government.

Decisive Successes of the War.

Fault-finders and ill-informed persons frequently complain of the unsatisfactory results of all the battles and campaigns of this war. They say that none of our officers have yet destroyed an army of the rebels, and that our greatest victories have simply and always ended by the defeated enemy retreating a short distance, reforming his lines, recruiting his ranks, and preparing for the next onset, in which the chances of success might be on one side or the other, but in which, whatever side might beat, nothing would be settled.

All this is undoubtedly true as applied to a great part of the military work and the campaigning of the war. But those who talk in this way overlook two, and, we may now say three, of the most remarkable campaigns in this or any other war—campaigns each of which closed by the destruction of a rebel army. Of course, by this we do not mean that every man in these respective rebel armies was butchered; for the slaughter of an army, fifteen or fifty or sixty-five thousand strong, is a circumstance that, so far as our reading goes, has not occurred very frequently in the history of the world's wars. We mean simply that we have had three campaigns in which three armies were, as the French say, put hors du combat, or put "out of the fight."

Curiously enough, all these three campaigns were the work and the victories of one of our Generals; and he, we may further say, is the only one of our Generals who has ever yet, at the close of a battle or a campaign, been able to say truthfully that his adversary's army was destroyed. We refer, of course, to Gen. GRANT; and we refer, of course, to his three great campaigns, which may be known as his Fort Donelson campaign, where he put sixteen thousand of the enemy hors du combat; his Vicksburgh campaign, in which, with the battles preliminary to the siege, he put not less than fifty thousand of the enemy hors du combat; and the Chattanooga campaign, in which he has just routed the greatest army of the rebellion, whose strength has been variously estimated at from sixty-five to one hundred thousand men. Beside these great feats of arms, GRANT has extinguished several minor, yet large and important forces of the rebels, such as that at Arkansas Post, last Spring, where several thousand prisoners, or the whole garrison, were taken.

Each of these campaigns has important bearings to the military eye other than the mere fact of the haul of prisoners made. But these we will not mention here. We wish to indicate but this single feature—that we have had battles in this war which have been decisive battles—in which the enemy's army was destroyed or put hors du combat. Our military critics abroad seem to be utterly unaware of any of these facts, as also our military critic-asters at home.

Lord Palmerston.

An attempt, as everybody knows, is being made at this moment to fasten upon Lord PALMERSTON an imputation which would, under any circumstances, be a very painful one, and which, if proved, would hardly fail to have for a man of his age the most disastrous consequences. Society, let it be ever so indulgent, and English society is very indulgent, is not likely to wink at the follies of a veteran of eighty-four. The middle classes insist upon at least a show of morality in public men. And the Queen has been long famed for her rigid and inexorable attention to the purity of the Court. So that we may presume that if it were fairly proved that the Nestor of English statesmen had forgotten what he owed to his years, name, and position, he would close his career in something worse than obscurity.

There is, however, every reason to believe that the accusation has been trumped up by a knavish attorney and a knavish clerk, for the sake of the notoriety to be acquired by bringing dishonor on the hoary head of a famous man. It is so improbable, on the face of it, that its pros and cons are not worth discussing; and we should not have alluded to the story at all, if it were not that the manner in which the English Press and public have received it has many points in it that we here would do well to imitate. Instead of lighting upon it like a parcel of vultures on a carcass, and wallowing in its loathsomeness—turning it over and over in search of aggravating circumstances, and making the most of every incident that could deepen its atrocity and heighten its effect, there has been an almost unanimous effort to throw it down, to repress its circulation, to reprobate its authors, and to encourage its victim in fighting against it. There is evidently a general feeling that a high position, long services, and great distinction, entitle the owner to the utmost confidence on the part of those whom he has served; that he has a right to the most favorable presumptions regarding every charge brought against him, and that in short the people cannot avoid sharing in a greater or less degree in the disgrace which may befall those whom it has for any reason long delighted to honor.

Now, we regret to say that there is a tendency amongst us to take an exactly opposite view of a case; in other words, to look upon prominent and important positions in the public service not as furnishing a claim to forbearance and sympathy, but as rather converting the incumbents into outlaws, whom any citizen may lawfully pelt with the shafts of contempt and suspicion. It is not of accusations directed against their official acts of which we now speak—these the public has a right to criticise as it pleases—but of the eagerness which we daily witness to pry into their private life, and cast odium upon it. The personal habits of every high official are made the subject of investigation by crowds of moral harpies as soon as he is sworn in, and before very long mysterious hints begin to appear touching his vices. A petty theft committed in early life at school or college is occasionally thrown in to heighten the effect of the picture, by showing the pains that nature took at the very outset of his career to warn his fellow creatures against him. Sometimes, too, we have dark allusions to his licentiousness, with a shadowy sketch of a deserted wife, weeping over her widowed situation and her ruined hopes, or of a forlorn mother whom the brute refuses to support. Often, too, the rascal whom the Republic has placed in one of its chief seats is an illegitimate son of an unusually wicked father, who has transmitted his worst qualities to his offspring.

There are, however, faults on which the practical slanderer does not care to dwell long. The vice which he best loves to detect and expose is drunkenness. One great recommendation that this has, is that it can be descanted upon to any extent without offending modesty. It can be discussed in families with as much ease as the color of a man's hair, and consequently all reports about it are sure to circulate far more rapidly than those about any other weakness. There is, however, never anything about it either in the least light, airy or redeeming. It is generally drunkenness of the gross kind—what the police reporters call "beastly intoxication," and is always caused, not by champagne or claret, but by whisky, and generally bad whisky. The American General's or statesman's favorite liquor, the draught on which he loves to make a brute of himself, is usually the worst kind of Bourbon or Monongahela. If he does not wallow in this he is pretty sure to be addicted to the use of opium.

What is most remarkable and most painful about all this is not, as we have already said, that such stories should be current, but that the public, by the avidity with which it receives them, and the readiness with which it believes them, should encourage their invention and circulation. Under no form of Government does the character of the public men affect the credit of the people so much as under a Democratic one—and yet under none does the public seem so indifferent to it, so ready to blacken it, or to invite others to blacken it; and one of the most odious results of party spirit amongst us is that men forget that even political opponents are their countrymen, and that when a high official is held up to odium for his vices the opposition has to share the shame.

East Tennessee—The Rebel Resources Failing Them.

The rebel journals say truly enough that their Government never appreciated the importance of East Tennessee to the Confederacy until they had lost it. Their former want of appreciation is shown by the feeble resistance they made to the advance of Gen. BURNSIDE; and their subsequent change of mind is indicated by their desperate efforts to recover what, by that advance, they had lost. Not to dwell at present on the military view, and on the incalculable strategic value of such points as Cumberland Gap, Knoxville, Cleveland and the line of the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad, it is beyond doubt that the mountainous regions of Eastern Tennessee and of Southwestern Virginia are of essential value to the rebels in the furnishing of resources for maintaining the war.

Eastern Tennessee not only furnishes mines of iron, copper, lead, salt, and coal, but a very large amount of sulphur and saltpetre. Hundreds of caverns exist along the limestone slopes and in the gorges of the Cumberland table land, which contain nitrous earth in immense quantities. A company was formed years ago, for the purpose of separating this nitre from the dross with which it was amalgamated, but like many profitable and proper enterprises in slave States, it failed for want of general interest or means of easy communication with markets. The nitre used in this country for the manufacture of gunpowder has hitherto been imported from India, and probably few dealers in the article had any knowledge of the vast stores existing in the bosom of the United States. The same may be said of sulphur which comes hither from Sicily. It also exists in great quantities around the mineral springs of East Tennessee and southwestern Virginia, but no one thought of mining it to any extent. The war awoke the rebels to the immense importance of these deposits. None exist in either of the Carolinas, in Georgia, nor Alabama, which yet remain to the Confederacy; and thus, in this respect, the losses to the rebellion in the loss of East Tennessee are incalculable.

The material of life, which East Tennessee furnished to the Confederate Army, was so [illegible] to it, thus the material of death we have just named. Immense quantities of bacon have been drawn during the last thirty months from that region, to feed the armies of LEE in the East and of BRAGG in the Southwest. Parson BROWNLOW has recently given some statistics on this subject, which have astonished those who were not familiar with the animal products of East Tennessee. Since the beef of Texas became unattainable to the rebel army, through our command of the Mississippi River, the bacon of East Tennessee has been very nearly all the animal food they have had or could get. Now that this in turn has been cut off, we have many proofs as to how hard up they are.

Now that GRANT'S magnificent operations have secured us control of East Tennessee, and of all Tennessee, the rebels will speedily begin to feel their loss even more keenly than their late howlings indicate. Without munitions of war, without animal food and with closely blockaded ports, a continuance of rebel hostilities will be a problem difficult of solution.

The Case of the Alexandra.

The motion for a new trial in the case of the Alexandra has probably been argued before this time in England, and we watch with some interest to see what will be the result. It is certain that the prospects of the case have changed very much since the trial.

We cannot say that we were much surprised at the result of the trial. The impression was general that the vessel would be acquitted if there was any loophole for her escape. The known feeling in England at the time was such that the jury, and possibly the Court, could hardly avoid being influenced by it; and it was also the general opinion here that the English Government were not thoroughly in earnest in their prosecution of the case, but would be quite willing to see the vessel go to sea, if only they could meet our Government with the verdict of a jury as their shield against complaint.

But whether this estimation of the feeling of the British Government at that time was true or not, we think there can be no doubt, judging from the later proceedings in the case, that it is now quite different. The recent motion on the part of the Attorney-General for an order to show cause why there should not be a new trial of the case, appears to have been pressed with earnestness as well as ability, and the granting of his application, though of course by no means indicative of the final result of the order, is still a substantial success, so far as it goes.

The order to show cause was moved for on two grounds, viz.: that the verdict was against the evidence, and that there was misdirection to the jury on the part of the judge who tried the cause. The Attorney-General's argument, which was reported quite fully in the English papers followed the two divisions of the case; first, the equipping, furnishing, and fitting out of the vessel; and secondly, the intent that she should be employed in the belligerent service of a country with which England was not at war; and on both of these points he claimed that the evidence in the case was all one way.

We have not the evidence before us, but if the Attorney-General's argument was a fair statement of it, there can be no doubt that he was entirely correct on both points. The lack of stowage room in the vessel for merchandise, the thickness of her bulwarks, a useless weight in a merchant vessel, but necessary in a vessel-of-war to keep out bullets; the arranging of the hammock nettings so as to resist musketry, the general strength of her structure, and especially of her rudder, and the guns and carriages which were being prepared for pivot guns, which she was perfectly adapted to carry, all showed conclusively that she was a vessel-of-war, and there was nothing at all against this evidence, except the statement of one witness, that she might be used as a yacht.

Then the evidence showed that she had been prepared under the superintendence of the agents of the rebels. Capt. BULLOCH was sent there for that purpose. FRAZER & Co., on whom the drafts were drawn to pay the Florida's crew, intervened in her construction, and there was a direct admission by MILLER, the builder of the vessel, "that she was being built by FRAZER & Co., to be employed in the service of the Confederate States Navy." Surely the Attorney-General was fully justified in saying that, "if the jury had been properly directed, this evidence, met as it was by no counter evidence, was evidence on which the Crown was clearly entitled to a verdict, and that a verdict taken in the face of such evidence is a verdict that ought not to be allowed to stand."

The Attorney-General proceeded to argue upon the terms of the act of Parliament, the policy which led to its enactment, and the inevitable effect to involve a nation in war and discredit its good faith, "if it permitted its shores and its ports to be used as arsenals for belligerent Powers who have none of their own, in order that war may be carried on practically direct from those ports on the high seas against other nations,"—and he called Baron BRAMWELL'S attention to a passage in his summing up of the case, in which the Judge spoke of the mischief expressed in the act, viz.: "that these acts tended to endanger the peace and welfare of the kingdom," and said that the sort of mischief contemplated might be, that a vessel might be building in one yard for the Confederates and another for the United States in another yard, and the two might come in collision in British waters, saying that he knew very well the Judge would not now adhere to that part of his charge on the trial. Baron BRAMWELL seems to have been somewhat stirred up by this direct attack, and quite a little discussion arose on the point, which the Attorney-General closed by the declaration that "any one who should seek to limit the object and policy of this statute in such a way, would be taking a liberty which it does not belong to any Court in the kingdom to do."

It is true that the argument of the matter on this motion for an order for short cause was only on one side, and as answering argument may present the case very differently. But the matter presented by the Attorney-General was, as the Judges said in granting the order to show cause, "certainly worthy of discussion." Especially was that part of it worthy of discussion and consideration in which he spoke of the tendency of such transactions to involve England in war and to discredit to her good faith. The newspapers and the public men have been discussing it for some time, and it does not now seem too much to hope that the change produced by the discussion has been great enough to make a new trial of the Alexandra called for, not only by the law and justice of the case, but also by the public sentiment of Great Britain.

Re-enlistment of Veterans.

As the late General Order of the War Department in reference to the re-enlistment of veterans in the field has not yet been published in full, we herewith give it in its official form:

GENERAL ORDER.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, November, 1863.

Order Granting Furloughs to Re-enlisted Veterans.

1. It is hereby ordered, that volunteers now in service re-enlisting as veteran volunteers under General Orders No. 191 from this office, shall have a furlough for at least thirty days previous to the expiration of their original enlistment.

This privilege will be secured to the volunteers either by ordering all so reenlisting with their officers to report in their respective States, through the Governor to the Superintendent of the Recruiting Service for furlough and reorganization, or by granting furloughs to the men individually.

2. Mustering Officers shall make the following stipulation on the Muster-in-Rolls of veteran volunteers now in service reenlisting as above: "To have a furlough of at least thirty days in their States before expiration of original term."

3. Commanding-Generals of Departments and armies are hereby authorized to grant the aforesaid furloughs within the limit of the time fixed, in compliance with this order, as the demands of the service will best permit, reporting their action to the Adjutant-General of the army.

4. In going to and from their respective States and homes, the veteran volunteers furloughed as above will be furnished with transportation by the Quartermaster's Department.

5. When the three-fourths of a company or regiment reënlist, the volunteers so enlisted may be furloughed in a body, for at least 30 days, to go home with their officers to their respective States and to organize and recruit, and the individuals of the companies or regiments who do not reënlist, shall be assigned to duty in other companies or regiments until the expiration of their term of service.

By order of the Secretary of War.

E. D. TOWNSEND, Adjutant-General.

The above order consists substantially of the series of propositions made to the War Department, three months ago, by Gov. MORTON, of Indiana, and was the suggestion of his comprehensive care for the interests of the country as well as the soldier. We have recently had occasion—indeed, ever since the war began we have had occasion—to notice the extraordinary energy and sagacity displayed by the Executive of Indiana in the conduct of the military affairs of that heroic State; and the success that has attended his efforts, and the appreciation of those efforts by the people of his own State and of the whole country, is the fit reward which his patriotic services have received. Probably the soldiers of no State have been sent into the field in such a superb military condition as those of Indiana—so well drilled, so finely equipped, so admirably provided for in every respect. When they have been wounded or fallen sick in the service, all that labor and affection could do for them has been done; and the widows and families of those who have fallen in the field, have been dealt with, not harshly or meanly, but generously, as was befitting to the nurslings of their country. To this foresight, attention and thoughtful care is doubtless due, in great measure, the efficiency always displayed and the successes achieved by Indiana soldiers while in field service. The record which the State has made in this war for the Union, in this fight against their old foe, JEFF. DAVIS, will be immortal, and has settled forever the taunts of the rebels as to the courage of Indians.

Another proposal of Gov. MORTON, looking to the benefit of the soldier, we find referred to in the Indianapolis Journal, and we learn that it is now under discussion, with strong influences in its favor. It is that Paymasters of the army shall be authorized to take with them "five-twenty bonds," from $50 to any larger amount, and allow the soldiers to take them in the place of any back pay, back bounty, or advance bounty (if he should reënlist) to which he may be entitled, or invest any pay in possession or due to him, which he may choose, in them. The proposal is urged for all the troops, but has as yet been acceded to only in the case of those from Indiana. The advantages of this arrangement are obvious, and we wish we could say that they were as generally bestowed as they are manifest. The soldier has the opportunity to turn every dollar due him, if he should not need it for immediate use, into an investment which has the double advantage of being just as good as "greenbacks" for currency, if they should be needed as money, and six per cent. better if they should be preferred as an investment.

At the present price of gold, on which the interest on these bonds is paid, the income they will yield the soldier will be about 9 per cent., fully equal to the first average investments of money in loans or real estate. On the other hand, the advantage to the country in giving the soldier a pecuniary interest in the permanence of the Government is obvious. The bonds are a little better than greenbacks, and of course can be used in their stead. If the bonds should not happen to be ready for delivery when the Paymasters go round, they are to take certificates, which shall be to the soldier the same as a bond. Now, a great many soldiers will leave the service with his last installment of bounty due, $75, with his advance bounty, (if he reënlists,) in his hands, $75, with his advance pay, $13, and whatever back pay may be due, not unlikely to amount to $50 or more, and can in nine cases out of ten invest $200 to $300, a very pretty sum to lay up against a rainy day.

PAINTERS' GRAND BALL AT IRVING HALL.—The first annual ball of the New York Painters' Association takes place at this popular hall to-morrow evening. The Committee of arrangements feel sanguine at having every thing that can be done to promote the pleasure and enjoyment of their guests. Tickets to the number of eight hundred have been disposed of already, and doubtless many more will be sold at the door. It is the desire of those having the matter in charge that all gentlemen should be accompanied by at least one lady. With the music of the Seventh regiment band in Irving Hall on a fine evening, the affair cannot fail to prove a success.

THE IRON-CLAD DICTATOR.—POSTPONEMENT OF THE LAUNCH.—The announcement that the Iron-clad Dictator would be launched yesterday, caused quite a large number of persons to assemble at the Delamater Iron works, where the ship was on the stocks. There being some imperfection, however, in the grease with which the ways were covered, the vessel could not be struck off in the short space during which full tide lasts. She will probably be floated off at the first full tide.

RARE PAINTINGS ON EXHIBITION.—The celebrated collection of rare and choice Paintings by modern artists, belonging to Mr. JOHN WEARE, of this City, and never before publicly exhibited, can now be seen at the Old Dusseldorf Gallery, No. 844 Broadway every day and evening, for three weeks. Mr. WEARE, with great liberality, has offered the proceeds of this exhibition to three of our most deserving charitable institutions, the "Women's Hospital," the "Nursery and Child's Hospital," and the Orphan Asylum. Season tickets can be procured of the Managers of the several Institutions.

To the Editors of the New-York Times:

Several of your correspondents have, of late, offered valuable suggestions on the treatment of the great social evil of our large cities, the presence of a large mass of brutalized beings, who, under our domestic institutions, have come to be considered the ruling class. The subject is so absorbingly important, that it invites the earnest reflection of every well-wisher of free institutions, and it may not seem impertinent to offer the result of such reflection to the public. I beg your leave, therefore, to make a few remarks on the subject.

Is freedom, or rather are Democratic institutions, compatible with the existence of a large class of uneducated, brutish people? That question ought to be as boldly put and as boldly answered as has been done by one of your correspondents. It is too often shuffled over and evaded. While that is being done there is no hope of finding the proper remedies for a state of things growing worse every day.

History shows that Democratic institutions may obtain in communities that stand on a very low plane of intellectual culture. They have flourished among barbarians; they are firmly rooted even in those Swiss cantons whose civilization has scarcely progressed a step since the middle ages. But then, in all such cases the extremes of education were not far apart. As between the best and the least educated there was no inconveniently great distance, so that there always remained the possibility of fully understanding and appreciating each others opinions, wishes and interests. On the other hand, there is no nation known to history that has been able to preserve Democratic institutions when the extremes of intellectual culture had grown so far apart as to exclude all possibility of finding a satisfactory mean average. Some philosophers say: "Intelligence (or education) is freedom." But the reverse would be just as true. Free institutions are possible among every people of which all classes come as near as possible to the average of that people's intelligence, no matter whether that average be high or low, as compared with other communities. The present average culture of the American people is undoubtedly higher than that of eighty years ago, but no reasonable man can deny that popular freedom is greatly more endangered now, simply because the extremes have continually grown apart at an alarming rate.

Now, all that may be said about the vital necessity of raising the uneducated classes to something like an average intelligence is true, and cannot be said often enough. It must be repeated often and persistently, until the people learn that compulsory education must be resorted to if popular institutions shall live. Still, this is not all. It is not sufficient to educate the growing generation, while there is a constant stream of immigration pouring into the country. The "social evils" of our large cities cannot be remedied by education alone, because there are tens of thousands of adult people who can never be reached by educationary efforts.

There are two things which may be and ought to be done. First—Let immigration be made a national affair. Every economist, every statesman, every philosopher and historian sees it in that light; but the law reduces it to a local interest. All our laws in regard to immigration are framed in such a manner as if the emigrants intended to migrate to the City and County of New-York. This State raises commutation money from the immigrants, and it is the State or the City that has to take care of the paupers among them. The poorest, vilest and most helpless of the immigrants remain in this City, forming layer upon layer of the volcanic substratum of our community. Why should this be? The immigrants are immigrants to the United States—not to a particular State or City. They have not been asked to come, except in a general way. So they are welcome in that general way, but in no other. As an increment of the productive power of the nation, immigration is a great benefit, but that general truth does not at all exclude the special truth that the unsystematic accumulation of immigrant population in particular communities is a great evil. In order to be beneficial, the immigration must be well digested and assimilated to the national system; otherwise it will produce social nausea and dyspepsia. Even if no special authority could be found in the Constitution, (though the "general-welfare" clause in connection with the naturalization clause would be sufficient,) it would nevertheless be the duty of the National Government to regulate the immigration in such a manner as to render it conducive to the general welfare as fully as possible. The immigrant arriving here, with no other means of living but his labor, has no claim upon any particular community of the country, nor has he ever had any idea of putting forth such claim. He has left his native country in order to find a market for his labor in a country that, he knows, needs all the labor it can get, but not in a particular city or State. It would, therefore, be no hardship, nor any stretch of natural justice if a bureau of immigration, connected with the Federal Government, should take all such immigrants in hand and wisely distribute them over the country, especially over those districts which are more in want of raw labor than the densely populated eastern States and cities. I know that to some the idea will be repulsive, because they have become accustomed to look upon every "interference" of Government with the action of the "laws of demand and supply" as despotism. But a closer examination will show them that there is no such interference in their proposition, but merely a removal of material obstacles to the action of these laws. Free trade is a sham wherever the healthy development of the purchasing power (productive industry) of a nation is prevented. So the distribution of the immigration by the mere action of the laws of demand and supply is a sham, when there are arriving thousands upon thousands of immigrants, with not the first penny wherewith to pay their fare to the West, or with not the slightest knowledge of the particular localities where their labor could find a ready market. A governmental bureau for the regulation and distribution of immigration, once established, would no more have to be considered a despotism than the institution of the emigrant depot at Castle Garden, and the compulsory landing of all emigrants at that depot. Its usefulness would be not less than that of the Bureau of Agriculture. Like that, it would directly aim at increasing the value of the productions of the country, by diverting accumulated, and therefore comparatively valueless labor, into channels where its greatest economical value would be developed. The immigrants, far from deprecating such governmental action as an interference with their personal liberty, would have to be, and probably would be thankful for it. If not, it would be of no consequence whatever. They would know the terms on which they could come to this country, and might as well stay away if they did not like them, precisely as they may now if they do not [illegible] Tammany candidate, has also the McKeon nomination; he is a most popular man in his district, bears an unsullied character, and possesses very fair abilities. The Democracy have made no better nomination.

W. Drake Parsons runs under the Mozart flag; personally, he is unexceptionable; he is well known to the public, as of old, as one of the proprietors of the Daily News; he is exceedingly popular, and on this score alone will secure a respectable vote. Personally, very strong; politically, very weak.

SEVENTH DISTRICT.

James H. Welsh, present incumbent, is the Union candidate, Capt. Bryan having declined in his favor. He has the strong claims of an unimpeached integrity, fine capacity, sturdy independence and fearlessness of character. Justice Connolly stigmatized him as the "emanation of a cellar porter-house," he being the son of the widely-known and universally-respected "Sandy Welsh," of the rere-named "Terrapin Lunch." Connolly makes ale and porter and sells it, but he evidently forgets his patrons in his insult to their business. "Sandy Welsh" was a man in all respects the peer of Michael Connolly, as our old citizens can testify. Every respectable citizen in the district should work to secure the reelection of Justice Welsh. Taxpayers should see to it, and so should law-lovers, for against him runs

Michael Connolly on the Tammany machine. The record of Justice Connolly is not one which should commend him to even a party support. He is foisted on Tammany, and is personally intensely unpopular. He has used his office to popularize himself, has lacked the dignity, impartiality and independence necessary for his position. He is not fit for it. His considering the gross outrage of entering a man's house on riot week, demanding food and drink true and the beating of the proprietor on refusal, as merely a "common porter-house fight" should unite against him the vote of every decent and law-abiding man in the district, of every man who cares for the safety of his family, his property, or himself. Such kindly considerations on the Bench for the rioter and the rowdy are dangerous to all classes of the community. His own party are anxious to get rid of him; he has been and is an incubus upon them, and from present appearances they promise to give him his dismissal, honor themselves, and benefit society. Mr. Connolly has neither personal or political claims for the position, and the district should, without regard to party, for its own sake, see that he is sent into retiracy once and for all.

The Mozart and McKeon candidate is Nicholas Spaeniers, a man who carries his heart on his sleeve, literally "a man of the people." He is a lawyer, is well known as the "Sage of Bloomingdale," and as the generous and gratuitous counsel for the poor, from rag-picker up. His character is unimpeachable, his ability conceded, and his personal popularity acknowledged. On all occasions he has accommodating leader in forlorn hopes, and on several has tripped in while a laugh was being made against him. He is a most energetic worker, has in this race energetic workers with him, and, if the Democracy elect, should be their choice. No really truer man or more worthy candidate is in nomination than Nicholas Spaeniers.

Thos. J. Barr, Tammany, once Ferry-Keeper, Sixth Ward, once State Senator, once Member of Congress, and is now Horse Inspector under the Government, with rank of Major in the army. He is doing well enough not to want the position, and has no claim to it. Of course, he is possessed of considerable capacity, but not of the kind to adapt him for the position of Police Justice.

Thomas A. Lennon is brought out by Mozart. He is a young man who has exploited as a member of the Legislature, but escaped without doing injury to himself, or any one else, which is more than can be said of most. He voted against the Broadway Railroad swindle. He has good abilities, excellent character, hosts of friends; and were there such a surprise as his election it would cause no regret.

Abner Lazar is the McKeon nominee. He keeps a porter-house at Eighth-avenue and Twenty-sixth-street, is recognized as a clever fellow, and good-humored man, having no more chance of an election than his sheet in Barnum's.

The incumbent, the present incumbent, Judge Mitchell, is one of the most popular men in nomination. His personal character, his judicial capacity, his impartial administration of justice, all of which have been beneficially felt in the community, inspire a confidence in him and a gratification at his nomination among men of all parties. The Eighth District will elect him undoubtedly, and thus convert its own interests. Wherever so excellent an opportunity occurs of securing a first-class judicial officer a District so intelligently populated as the Eighth will not hesitate. He is the Union nominee, and the candidate of the German anti-nonpartisan parties.

WOMEN NAVIGATION MEETING.

That branch of the City Democracy which [illegible] C. Gaynor Governor for the Mayoralty held a meeting last evening in the hall of the Cooper Union to ratify the nominations of their candidates. The hall was well filled, and there was a considerable crowd around the entrance outside stairs. The usual accompaniments of music, banners, flags, devices and transparencies were liberally provided, and there was a plentiful supply of speakers.

Though called for 8 o'clock, the meeting was not organized until 9, when Judge Mc. Sweeney proposed Hon. John Kelly as Chairman, which motion was heartily seconded.

HON. JOHN KELLY.

Mr. Kelly severally reviewed the official career of Mr. Boole, going into details which extended from the time when Mr. Boole first became a Commissioner till he gained the position of City Comptroller. He compared the taxation of late with earlier years, showing the enormous increase, and insisting that in the long run, the burden fell mainly on the poor man. He said that Mr. Gunther was a merchant who did not seek the office for what he could make out of it, but for the honor of the elevation itself, and for the purpose of giving to the City a strong, honest, conscientious Government. He spoke of Mr. Gunther's power, if he were elected, to veto bad measures, and was sure Mr. Gunther would exercise that power.

Mr. Stephen P. Russell read a list of Vice-Presidents at large, Vice-Presidents from Wards, and Secretaries; Mr. F. W. Birdsall, the report of the Committee on Nominations, and Mr. Theodore Martin the resolutions.

INTRODUCTION OF MR. GUNTHER.

Immediately upon the adoption of the resolution the Chairman introduced Mr. Gunther, who was received with repeated rounds of cheers and a performance by the band of "Hail to the Chief." In response Mr. Gunther simply said:

Democrats and fellow-citizens, I did not come here to make a speech this evening; and, however well I might feel disposed to do so, the labor and excitement of the campaign in which I am engaged unfits me for the task. I merely come to thank you for the manifestations of esteem you have displayed on my account, and sincerely hope on Tuesday night next to be able to congratulate you on our victory.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

The resolutions may be thus epitomized. They did not touch at all on national affairs; they deprecated the enormous taxation under which the City suffers, and the corruption prevalent among our municipal rulers; they denounced Mr. Boole as the leader of the combination of Republicans and so-called Democrats who, in the Common Council, plunder the public treasury; they declared that Mr. Blunt had been nominated for the purpose of assisting the election of Mr. Boole, and, finally, they enlogized Mr. Gunther, and declared the interests of the City demanded his election.

Mr. Thomas E. Tomlinson was announced as the first regular speaker, amid loud cries for "Brady"—(Mr. James T. Brady)—who had been discovered on the platform by the audience. After a lengthy oration from Mr. Tomlinson, Mr. Brady came forward, and was received with deafening tokens of applause.

SPEECH OF JAMES T. BRADY.

Mr. Brady referred to the fact that the last time he had addressed an audience from that platform, it had been at a time when the prospect was as looked upon it as a presage of the tempestuous difficulties they would have to encounter in their efforts to purify the government of the City. He had been read out of the Democratic party long ago; but he would like to know who was going to read John McKeon and John Kelly, and a few other Democrats he saw around him, out of the party. (Cheers.) He was ready to stand on the same platform with such a man as John Kelly, and sink or swim with him. He did not know whether any of the audience had been present at the marriage of Mozart and Tammany, or if any had received pieces of the bridal cake. If they had, he would warrant each piece had a "ring" in it. (Great laughter and applause.) The last time he spoke on that platform, it was in an effort to save the judiciary from threatening disgrace. The effort was not entirely successful, but it defeated Fernando Wood's brother-in-law and elected Florence McCarthy. (Cheers.) He wasn't going to say anything in derision, abuse, or insult about Mr. Boole or Mr. Blunt—the two "Bs"—each striving to get into the same hive; but, as he, the speaker, thought, neither likely to get there. He would pay a compliment to Mr. Boole. His personal relations with Mr. Boole had always been friendly. Mr. Boole was a man who, while attending diligently to the interests of his office, was never likely to forget his own. (Cheers and laughter.) Mr. Brady said the Press seemed to be in favor of Mr. Boole for Mayor because he was a good City Inspector. Good things were dear. When a man dined one day at Sweeny's, and the next at Delmonico's, we were apt to form our own conclusions. (Laughter.) Mr. Blunt was a most excellent gentleman, and, if elected, would discharge his duty with honesty and to the extent of the ability he possesses. Nevertheless, in view of what he desired in respect to the regeneration of the City, he went for C. Godfrey Gunther. Mr. Brady said he had no influence, in the sense in which that word was too generally used; he was proud that he had no influence among the thieves and plunderers of party. (Cheers.) He was no politician, and was glad of it. Mozart and Tammany had engineered the Democratic party against an Administration that hadn't a friend, until they had engineered Democracy out of every State in the Union except New-Jersey. (Cheers.) Mr. Brady deprecated the reflections cast upon Mr. Boole on account of his birthplace. Such reflections were mean and dastardly. He desired the defeat of Mr. Boole; but he would defeat him "fairly and honorably." This was the second time he had addressed his fellow-citizens in the hope of destroying the unholy alliance between Mozart and Tammany, and of restoring the Democratic party to the strength and purity it possessed in the days of Andrew Jackson. (Cheers.) He admonished his audience that they had set out upon their present crusade with the avowed purpose of putting down corruption, and he exhorted them not to allow themselves by selfish motives to be diverted from that object. Mr. Brady concluded by reading and speaking to a series of resolutions of his own, whereof the following created considerable sensation:

Resolved, That we respectfully request the learned and efficient Recorder and District-Attorney to have the next Grand Jury in this County, specially instructed on the propriety and duty of inquiring whether any of our citizens are amenable to indictment for population, bribery, sale of offices or appointments, corruption, or malversation in office, or any other criminal transgression affecting the administration of the City Government.

He pledged himself to be sworn in as a special district attorney, to see that the intent of his resolutions was carried into effect. (Tremendous cheering.) He knew that at the last elections Mozart and Tammany harnessed for offices among themselves. This was indictable; and he wanted to be the prosecutor to punish those who had been guilty of doing it. Mr. Brady specially desired to place himself in a position of defiance toward Tammany and Mozart. His speech was brilliant and pointed, and elicited, by turns, the most enthusiastic demonstrations of merriment and applause.

JOHN M'KEON AND OTHERS.

Mr. Brady was followed by Hon. John McKeon, in a speech which was mainly statistical, and by Capt. Burnett, after which the meeting adjourned.

Twentieth Ward Union Ratification Meeting.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of the Union men of this Ward was held last evening at the headquarters, Lincoln Hall, corner of Thirty-third-street and Eighth-avenue. Mr. Cummings H. Tucker opened the proceedings, and nominated John Watts, Esq., for President, who in a forcible speech alluded to the importance of the coming municipal election. Mr. J. B. Pozzoz nominated a list of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries, which were unanimously adopted. Mr. Cornelius A. Ruggles submitted the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Unionists of the Twentieth Ward, in mass meeting assembled, heartily and unanimously ratify the nomination for Mayor of that fearless and upright champion of Reform, Orison Blunt.

Resolved, That we support Orison Blunt, not only because he is honest, but also because of his patriotic devotion to the cause of our common country.

Resolved, That in John Quackenbush, for Police Justice, and in Wm. Sharpe, Chas. O. Pinckney, Joshua Oudlipp, N. H. Badcock, Michael Snyder and James E. Watson, we recognize men of ability, integrity and capacity, eminently worthy of our suffrages.

Resolved, That the welfare of the Common Schools of the Twentieth Ward demand the election of James L. Hatch for Commissioner, Adolphus C. Ray for Inspector, and John F. Williams, Stephen G. Shaaks and James Demarest for Trustees. We nominate citizens qualified by proper and chosen these fountains of public virtue and universal intelligence.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Hon. E. Delafield Smith addressed the meeting, and gave a vivid picture of the bad management of our municipal affairs. He pointed out the necessity of electing true and reliable Union men to the responsible offices. He was warmly applauded. He was followed by Chas. E. Whitehead, Esq., who alluded to the various candidates in the field. He hoped that every man would do his duty, and then the City would certainly be redeemed.

The Chairman then introduced Hon. Ignatius A. Cornell, who spoke warmly in favor of Orison Blunt, and alluded to his former differences with that gentleman. But in his white every man should forget personal wrongs, and go for the best man. He illustrated his speech by giving statistics in reference to the increase of our taxes during the last ten years.

Hon. Horace Greeley, who was received with great applause, followed in an able speech, stating the reason why Orison Blunt should be elected. He made an interesting statement about the Aldermanic ring, whose father, F. A. Boole was. He alluded to our lamentable state of national affairs, and expressed his conviction that, with proper efforts, next Tuesday the Union citizens would elect their respective nominees. After a short speech by Mr. Dennemoyer, the meeting adjourned with three cheers for the Union candidates.

The School Ticket—Fifteenth Ward.

The Public Schools of the Fifteenth Ward have been unsurpassed in their success and adaptability. They are resorted to by pupils from all parts of the city, and hundreds of children are constantly waiting to take the first vacant seat. They have been visited and admired by distinguished travelers from our own country and from Europe. They are an honor to the Ward and the city. This success has doubtless resulted in part from the practice in that ward of selecting school officers with care, and reelecting those who have served with ability and faithfulness. Of those now in office, (but not now candidates,) Mr. Dwight and Mr. Bleakman were first elected school officers in 1842, and Mr. Oliver in 1854; and of those now candidates, Dr. Blakeman and Dr. Griswold were first elected in 1860 and 1861. We invite attention to circular and nomination for the years [illegible]

For Trustees of Common Schools of Fifteenth Ward,

For Councilmen of the Ninth Senatorial District,

GEORGE McLEAN,
WILLIAM S. OFFYEN,
JEREMIAH PAYGBURN,
JAMES GALWAY,
WILLIAM HEPBURN.

Mr. Blunt, the candidate for Mayor, is a citizen of this ward, and has held for several years offices of its highest responsibility. We need only to refer to his career as a public officer, his resistance of extravagant expenditures, his efforts to keep down taxation, his constant and active attention to his public duties, his unremitted voluntary efforts to maintain the Government in this day of national peril, and his personal integrity, as evidence that he will, if elected, prove a faithful guardian of the public interests.

At the last election for Mayor,
Fernando Wood received ..... 34,167 votes.
C. Godfrey Gunther received ..... 26,767 votes.
George Opdyke received ..... 25,989 votes.

At the late election held on the 3d of this month, our candidates received upwards of twenty-four thousand votes. Why, then, with the independent vote he is sure to receive, can we not elect Mr. Blunt, with the opposition divided between Mr. Boole, the leader of the "Ring," and Mr. Gunther, the President of the disloyal "peace" meeting at Union Square, which was the true source of the riot, conflagration and murder of last July, and which have added so much to our taxes for the next year?

The Public Schools are sustained at a great expense to the tax-payers, but they are, nevertheless, when properly managed, a great economy. If the children now taught in public schools of the Fifteenth Ward alone, were sent to private schools, at the usual rates of tuition, it would cost the parents in this Ward alone, one hundred thousand dollars and upwards a year more than it now costs in the public schools.

There are now employed in this Ward seventy-five female and thirteen male teachers, charged with the instruction of about two thousand girls, and an equal number of boys. They have been hitherto entrusted by their parents to the care and management of the present School Officers with the most flattering confidence, manifested by frequent reelections. It is known that the School Officers receive no compensation whatever for their services, and it is not easy to find competent men who can be induced to perform the labor.

Mr. Raymond's long experience in the public service as Lieutenant-Governor and member of the Legislature, and as a graduate, and for many years a Trustee of one of the most respectable institutions of public education in the country, has given him the highest qualification for the office of member of the Board of Education. Mr. Vail is a respectable lawyer, an old resident of the Ward, who takes a deep interest in our schools.

The remaining candidates for School Officers, have already served you without a suspicion of fraud, political favoritism, extravagance, or mismanagement of any kind. We again present them for your suffrages, with the confident expectation that they will not now be rejected for those who are as once untried and without experience.

The candidates for Police Justice, Civil Justice and Members of the Common Council, are too well known in this community to require particular mention at our hands.

ERASTUS C. BENEDICT, President.
FRED. A. CONKLING, Chair. Ex. Com.
THOMAS E. STEWARD, Secretary.

The Late Action on the Rappahannock.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT FROM THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, Nov. 19, 1863.

General: The Secretary of War received with great satisfaction, at the hands of Brig.-Gen. D. A. Russell, the seven battle flags and one staff taken in the recent assault on the enemy's intrenched position at Rappahannock Station by the storming party led by the gallant Gen. Russell.

The Secretary desires me to convey his thanks to the officers and men engaged in those operations of the army, which reflect such high credit upon the skill which planned, and the bravery which successfully executed them.

I am, General, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Maj.-Gen. Meade, U. S. Vols., commanding Army of the Potomac.

Resumed Work.—Most of the laborers in the different ship yards in Jersey City, who struck for higher wages, have resumed work—their demands having been acceded to.

Morton's Gold Pens are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in another column.

SONG OF THE ANGEL OF HEALTH.
DEDICATED TO THE LADIES OF NEW-YORK.

O fair are the Orient's sun-beaming towers
Where I tenderly nurture the many-tinted flowers
That Nature has planted in odorous wealth
For the soothing of pain, for the giving of health:

And sweetness my haunts by the soft-rolling seas
Where I woo the cool wind to the flame of disease;
How I thrill to behold the poor invalid's eye
Drawing life every moment from billow or sky!—

And grand is my throne on the star-kissing crag
Where the cloud waves around me its glorious flag—
'Mid the sweep of the breeze or the roar of the storm,
Breathing rapturous strength to the plague-smitten form!

But these not alone are the joy of my heart;
My Temple is also erected by Art;
What jewels are there in my diadem twined,
What glory by genius and skill are enshrined!

O rapture! O rapture! what beauty I see
From the hand of Beneficence beaming for me;
How under the light of her large sunny eyes
Every Snake of Disease by my pedestal dies!

For 'tis here that the crag and the sea and the bower
Are condensed into One by a magical power—
Where the invalid loses the poison and pain,
While his soul and his sense leap to new life again!

"And where," dost thou ask, "does this proud temple shine
With its spirit of love and its splendor divine?"
In the City of cities it glitters to view,
And Helmbold is priest with his saving Buchu!

Note.—The above brilliant Poem, by William Rose Wallace, (whom the illustrious George D. Prentice calls the "Greatest American Lyric Poet,") was sent to us by him as a proof of his high estimate of our medicine—"which," as he says, "have been of such extraordinary service to many of his friends."

NEW-YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD.
The undersigned stockholders in the New-York Central Railroad, feeling deeply interested in a reform of the management of said Road, respectfully recommend all holders of stock who cannot be themselves present at the ensuing election of Directors, to send their proxies to Thomas W. Olcott, Albany, John E. Williams and George F. Tallman, of New-York, or either of them, to be voted upon by them at that election.

At some time previous to that day a meeting will be called of all the stockholders who may then send them their proxies, for the nomination of a Board of Directors, or whom their votes will be cast.

The undersigned respectfully suggest that the interest of stockholders will be better secured by thus placing their proxies in the hands of disinterested and well known gentlemen, such as those named above, than by entrusting them to the present officers of the Road, to be used in securing their own reelection.

SATURDAY, Nov. 28—P. M.

The price of Gold advanced 3¼ ⅌ cent. today, returning to the figure of Wednesday before the conclusive news of GRANT's victory. As explained in yesterday's report the trade demand for Bills on London is good, while our exports of Domestic Produce are comparatively light. The drain of Gold from the great Banks of England and France and the high price of Money in London and Paris are calculated to hasten remittances from this side where balances are due or orders for the coming Spring trade are to be covered. Added to these causes for firmness in the Gold Market is the continued heavy short interest made in the Gold room of GILPIN'S Exchange from day to day on the confident calculation that good news from our armies must bring down the price before long. This interest has necessarily to buy Gold for delivery as their 3 day contracts fall due. The shipments to Europe today were $1,115,000, making for the whole week $1,331,057.

The Associated Banks, at a general meeting to-day, virtually abolished the arbitrary equalization of the Legal Tender Currency adopted early in this month, under a resolution adopted when the recent negotiation for $35,000,000 United States 5 ⅌ cent. Legal Tender Notes was made. According to this rule, each Bank was compelled to keep its pro rata of the whole sum of Legal Tender reported from day to day at the Clearing-house, or else borrow of the Loan Committee, on 5 ⅌ cent. interest, the difference between its holding and the amount equalized or assigned as its pro rata. The modification to-day does away with all this, except where any one or more Banks report less than 10 ⅌ cent. of Legal Tender to their last averaged line of net Deposits. The rare instances in which this rule will be operative, render the change tantamount to an abandonment of the equalization principle, and every Bank in the Association, is now left free to lend or withhold its own Legal Tender means. The effect upon the Money Market, as disembarrassing it of the original cause of stringency early in November, is already felt to be favorable.

The Railway Share Market opened with much steadiness at the early Board, and nearly all descriptions recovered 1@1½ ⅌ cent. from the depression of yesterday. Soon after the Board broke up there was a disposition to sell Erie and some of the other Stocks at a concession from the printed sales. But before 2 o'clock, the turn was strongly upward again, and at the Second Board the general list was very buoyant at an advance of 1¼@2 ⅌ cent.

At 4 o'clock the following prices were made in comparison with Friday night, the market leaving off firm:

	Fri.	Sat.		Fri.	Sat.
Gold Coin	134½	134¾	Western Prod.	116	118

The Colonels Bible.

To the Editor of the Army and Navy Journal:

SIR: You have already noticed the death of Col. CHARLES E. ELLIS, of the Marine brigade, which is stated to have taken place on the 20th of the last month, at Bunker Hill, in Illinois. It is now but little more than a year since the father of this young soldier received a mortal wound on the deck of his own ship, in a successful attack made upon the rebel gunboats on the Mississippi, with a fleet of steam rams, constructed and equipped under his immediate superintendence, and commanded by himself. His death was followed almost immediately by that of his wife, who, after a long journey, had been able to reach her husband only a few hours before he breathed his last; and died herself the day after his funeral. To this double affliction in the same family is now added the loss of the eldest son, who had accompanied his father to the West, and after his death continued in the service, first as a cadet and volunteer, and finally as a Colonel in the Marine brigade, commanded by his uncle, Gen. A. W. Ellis, under whose direction this branch of the service had been first equipped and organized.

The family who have been thus severely visited had been for several years residents of Washington and Georgetown. Col. ELLIS the elder was well known among us as a civil engineer of established reputation, to which he added the more appreciable qualities of a good, kind, energetic and exemplary citizen. To his friends here some brief notice of his life and services, and those of his son, who has soon followed him, may not be unacceptable; and at any rate will be but a meetest tribute (unhappy but a small one) to the true worth and eminent patriotism of both.

The elder Col. CHARLES ELLIS was born in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, in the year 1810, and commenced the career in which he afterward distinguished himself as an assistant, in the exploration of the north branch of the Susquehannah in the year 1827. Canals were at that time the chief subject of consideration among statesmen and economists, and New-York having achieved the first triumph in that direction, was already beginning to exhaust, not only in her Metropolis but in the whole interior of the State, the happy effects of her well-directed enterprise. It needed, however, but little experience in Pennsylvania and the other more Southern States which are crossed by the main ridges of the Alleghanys, to show that in the passage of these summits railroads must, at least for very considerable distances, take the place of canals. Accordingly, we soon after find Col. ELLIS employed as engineer on the first railroad constructed in his native State, and subsequently in similar and kindred improvements elsewhere. Between this time and 1840 he successively planned and superintended the construction of the two first suspension bridges ever built in this country—the one over the Schuylkill at Fairmount, and the other across the Niagara below the Falls. In both of these the success of the project was in a great measure due to the skill and renown of the engineer.

Col. ELLIS was henceforth considered as walking in the first rank of his profession, and became soon after engaged in public improvements further south. It would enlarge this notice much beyond its limits and purpose even to enumerate the various public works in which he was concerned, either as a directing or consulting engineer. As an instance characteristic both of his ability and confidence in his own resources, we may mention the construction of the temporary track on the line of the Virginia Central Road at the passage of the Blue Ridge. During one of the intervals in these avocations he found time for a visit to Europe, in which he was accompanied by his family.

A very considerable portion of Col. ELLIS'S professional career had been spent in Virginia; and at the commencement of the rebellion there were few persons better acquainted with the general conformation and peculiar features of the interior of the State than he, or who could be more relied upon for topographical information concerning it. At an early day he placed both himself and all the knowledge he possessed at the disposal of the Government. It will be remembered that he did not hesitate to attack publicly and in no measured terms the character and conduct of the Commanding General. Of the justice of these military criticisms it is not our purpose now to speak.

In the ensuing Spring, and after the fatal demonstration made by the Merrimac upon our ships at James River, Col. ELLIS was authorized by the War Department to superintend the construction of a ram fleet in the Mississippi, and (what would not always have been as welcome an addition) to command it in its coup d'essai. It is a singular fact, in relation to this new mode of naval warfare, that more than thirty years ago it had been strongly recommended and urged upon the consideration of the Government by two officers standing high in the naval service, and had at that time been with great unanimity consigned to a place among the class of inventions known as humbugs. The Merrimac has proved herself a bug of an entirely different species, and operated a proportional change in public opinion. Col. ELLIS lost no time in the construction of vessels of this character out of such material as he could find in the Mississippi, and fell in the first attack made by them; closing in this last act of devoted patriotism, at the early age of 58, a life distinguished throughout by eminent ability, integrity and usefulness.

It was not the least excellent or deserving part of this last service of Col. ELLIS, that in remaining it to the country, he necessarily disregarded the dearest and strongest ties at domestic life. Mrs. ELLIS, whose death had followed so closely upon that of her husband, was by birth a Virginian, possessing among her other kind and womanly excellencies a deep-rooted attachment to her kindred, to the place of her birth, and the hitherto glorious annals and legends of the Old Dominion. All these dear and long-cherished memories were now at once to be sequestered and hidden; or hearded deep in the heart of hearts as things contraband and unholy.

Col. CHARLES RIVERS ELLIS, whose recent death has just been announced, and with a sketch of whose brief and brilliant career we will close this notice, was the eldest son of these worthy parents and the second in age of four who survived them. He was, at the time of his death a little more than twenty years of age, and had received the best education the public seminaries of the country could give; to which had been added, though at an early age, a brief course of foreign travel and a short residence in Paris. All these advantages in his case had been matured and perfected by a home education of infinitely greater value. To him had not been wanting the never-failing fund of knowledge always gleaned about the family hearth, where the domestic divinities are both wise, prudent and affectionate, and where the hoarded treasures of age and experience are to be garnered up in younger hearts for future use and guidance. Many of those who have partaken of the hospitalities of his father's residence in Georgetown, where the full and genial plenty of a Pennsylvania farm-house, was gracefully blended with the not less hearty kindness of a Southern plantation, will remember him not many years since as a modest, pensive and rather quiet boy. He had made choice of medicine as a profession, and at the outbreak of the rebellion was chiefly engaged in pursuing the requisite studies, in which he had already made such progress as to fill competently the place of assistant surgeon in one of the military hospitals. He followed his father westward in the spring of 1862, and commanded one of the rams in the action at Memphis, in which his father lost his life. On the organization of the Marine brigade he received the appointment of Colonel, being perhaps the youngest who had ever filled so high a grade in any active campaign. His subsequent service on the Mississippi fully justified the wisdom of the selection, while his firm but modest and equitable demeanor earned him from the envy and detraction which usually follows in the wake of a rapid promotion. It is not, however, of his military life and history which we intend to speak, but of the kindlier and more homely part of his character as a citizen and a brother. His last visit made here some time in September, and for which he had received his first furlough from active service, was undertaken solely for the purpose of aiding his now doubly orphaned sister, in some necessary domestic arrangements. At that time, though evidently suffering with the relics of disease contracted among the brakes and fens of the Mississippi, there was as yet visible no change or no alarming symptom, and he had the promise of a long and useful life before him. Both who met him knew that he had all his life been subject to severe attacks of neuralgia in the head, and his death, which occurred suddenly during a visit to his uncle in Illinois, is supposed to have resulted either from that cause, or from an injudicious (though usual remedy) taken to allevialte the pain.

The United States and Canada.

A SPEECH BY T. D'ARCY MCGEE.

Mr. T. D'ARCY MCGEE delivered a characteristic lecture at Kingston, C. W., a few days since. In the course of it he said:

For his part, he had made up his mind to uphold the British Constitution in preference to the American Republic, and he would tell them why.

The Americans of the present day saw they represent the generation, which in 1776 astonished the world. He did not think the Americans of the present day represented that generation. He had seen much in the manners and customs of the people on the other side which grated against the feelings of the old countrymen. Indeed, they had sadly degenerated in manners, and it was an established fact that when a nation changed its manners it exhibited most the signs of deterioration. When its morals changed, the same was the case, and for this change of morals and manners various reasons were assigned. The Greeks attributed their change in morals to the deterioration in their music. The Americans of 1868 had fallen off from the type of the Americans of 1776. The former believed their prosperity, their rapid, and, in many cases, unheaby progress, was owing to their institutions, but he did not believe this, for other associations and combinations were required to effect all this. In America there was larger room for disputatious politicians, but in England there was law, and the disorders were brought to task. Had either succeeded, or they signally failed, as did frequently been the case in the English history. A country so prosperity inoculate another, required to have a fixity of character, and he would never advocate the adoption of a character which had not this fixity. If America there was larger room for disputatious politicians, but in England there was law, and the disorders were brought to task. They either succeeded, or they signally failed, as did frequently been the case in the English history. A country so prosperity inoculate another, required to have a fixity of character, and he would never advocate the adoption of a character which had not this fixity. The ephemeral characteristics of the American nationality he did not admire, nor in many points did he admire the operations of the British institutions, for in his youth he had seen the shady side of them.

Yet he would tell them that the British Monarchical form of government, the result of nearly a thousand years, with age, experience and wisdom to recommend it, was the best form of government existing. If had now been in existence since the days of ALFRED the Great, and had seen others around it crumble into dust—witness Venice and other countries. Was this chance? Was it accident? To effect this longevity there must have been deep human wisdom and sagacity combined, and, after it had withstood the decaying effects of time and vicissitude, we are reasonably asked to respect, esteem it, and give it the preference until we have found a better one. To obtain good government we must have authority, justice and law combined, and this good government was to be found under British rule—he would not say Ireland, for there was too much insubordination there. It was surprising how in the English form of government the old and the new were united. The British people had faith in authority, and regarded old age as a thing to be respected. They looked for authority, believing freedom would follow as a natural result of wise legislation, whereas the Americans had reversed the card, saying that freedom having been first established, wise legislation would follow. This rested too much power in the people, and the change was too violent and rapid to be a salutary one. The Americans have asked us to copy them, but we may reasonably say, "why should we do so when you have changed so from month to month, from year to year?" Without stability no Government can hope to exist. The particular, individual and detailed characteristics of the American people have changed, and if the old Puritans could only now witness the demagoguism of the pulpit, they would feel shocked. The preachers in the United States do not now address their congregations in the good old style of their Puritan fathers; they take hold of vulgar and popular prejudices, and turn them to account in the pulpit, from political or other motives. And, following in the wake of the pulpit, the American Press has also changed. It is the high-road, and Press Preaches no longer. The members of the Press, on the other side, now-a-days, are not content with a single isolated lie to what the opposite, but multiply lies by thousands. Indeed, as an evidence of this, he had once been told that the morning issue of the New-York Herald would cover 27 acres! He did not know it or if not this was true, in olden times the Puritans had only a few books to read, a King James' Bible, Pilgrim's Progress, &c., but from the perusal of these, their characters were made up. From them they learned nothing false or deceptive. But on the other hand, how could the characters of the American people of 1868 be well made up from the false prints which they daily perused. The English people believed that old age had to be cultivated; that old age should be respected, and that a capital stock of wisdom derived from experience and other sources, should be handed down from age to age for the benefit of succeeding posterities. The Americans believed, on the other hand, that everything came by intuition, but he (Mr. McGee) thought they were vitally mistaken. The English believed that Governments grew and were not made—that is, not created all at once. That a Northern country required a Northern Government, and that a Southern country a Southern Government, and that to unite these with the difference of morals, manners, customs, dress, climate, &c., would be dangerous to the peace of both. For examples of this state of things, they had only to look to history, and even to regard the state of Europe at the present time. It was owing greatly, if not mainly, to the fact of her isolated, geographical position that England was so great. Hedged in by the blue circle of the Atlantic Ocean, she had preserved her ancient Anglo-Saxon peculiarities untarnished, while other European countries had either merged into one another, or eventually fallen to decay. Had England been joined to Europe, she would not have been half as great. The English had thus maintained their isolated political character without deterioration, and influenced the rest of the world thereby. She had not been drawn into the maelstrom of European Government. In Canada it would be impossible to have the precise form of British Government, but we might have an outline of it.

Important Railroad and Mail Changes.

COMMUNICATION WITH WASHINGTON.

From the Washington Republican, Nov. 2.

On Monday next, 23d inst., a general change in the schedules between New-York and Washington occurs.

Four daily trains, at improved speed, will run in each direction for through travel and mails, leaving Washington at 5 and 11:50 A. M., and 5 and 6:30 P. M. Leave New-York at 6 and 10 A. M., and 1:30 and 12 P. M.

One or two of these trains each way, will pass through Philadelphia, without change of cars between Jersey City and Washington. Before the 1st of January, all the trains, both freight and passenger, are expected to run between New-York and Washington without any change, whatever, using locomotive power, by the new road built around the northern limits of the city of Philadelphia, between Kensington and Gray's Ferry.

The passengers and mails from Washington, connecting in New-York for points north or east, will leave Washington at 5 P. M., but all New-York travel proper can take the sleeping cars at 6:30 P. M. here, and reach New-York in ten hours precisely, without interruption or change.

The Baltimore and Ohio line adds another passenger train between Washington and Baltimore, for the benefit of Government clerks, Congressmen, and others, who will lodge in Baltimore, by moving to and from Washington, to suit business hours here. This is expected to relieve through travel trains also.

The double tracks between this city and Baltimore, as well as between the Susquehannah and Philadelphia, and also near Trenton, are all being rapidly completed, and sections of them will be put in use at once.

The Baltimore and Ohio Company also improves its schedule for Western passenger trains from Washington and Baltimore, to meet the demands of increased travel, the route now being regarded as perfectly safe.

THE MILITARY STRENGTH OF THE NATION.—The correspondent of the Baltimore Sun has been permitted to examine the forthcoming volume of Mr. KEARNEY, Census Commissioner, upon population. The following extract, showing the natural yearly increase of fighting men, is interesting:

"When a population has reached nearly its permanent condition, as in Europe and in the old States of America, one-fifth of the total population is still found to represent nearly the number of males between the ages 18 and 45. But the emigrating ages are nearly allied to the military ages; and in the newly-settled States of the West the proportion of fighting men is accordingly greater than in the Atlantic States. Beginning at the East and proceeding Westward, the proportion of white males from 18 to 45 in the white population in Maine is 19.5 per cent.; New-York, 20.8; Illinois, 22.1; Minnesota, 23.6; California, 47.1; Virginia, 18.7; South Carolina, 18.9; Arkansas, 29.1; Texas, 21.8.

The total of white males between the ages of 18 and 45 in all the States (secede included) and in the Territories and District of Columbia appears, by the census tables of 1860, to be 5,628,865. During the year 1864 about 277,500 white males reached and passed the age of 18, and 128,600 arrived at and passed the age of 45, leaving a difference of 148,900. This latter number, when diminished by the natural deaths and increased by the accessions from immigration, will evidently express the total increase of the military population (whites) during 1861. About 140,000 is estimated as the clear increase of fighting population in 1861. The number of souls of course increases with augmented population in the aggregate, but that of this country has not been increased by immigration since the war, began to the extent that existed before. From these data it seems pretty clear that more persons are annually put hors de combat (killed or permanently disabled) by the war than the military forces are augmented by the natural increase of fighting population.

GEN. WRIGHT AND THE ENGLISH ADMIRAL.—It may not be known that our late marine visitor, the British ship-of-war Sutlej, entered our harbor in a suitable state of a very disorganized frame of mind. On entering the harbor she neglected to obey the port regulations by bringing to, and Admiral ACTON accordingly fired an 11-inch shell across her stern—of itself her Britannic Majesty could not mistake the small was an empty one. The Admiral rather gruffly demanded an explanation of Gen. WRIGHT, which the General courteously gave, informing the half-mad action of Admiral Sirlay, however. The Admiral was not satisfied, and wrote another letter, stating his conviction that a boat should have been sent off to board him and ascertain the august nature of the vessel before firing a shot across her royal wake. Before Gen. WRIGHT'S second reply was penned and sent, the Sutlej sailed, and the matter may yet be made the subject of diplomatic correspondence.—San Francisco Bulletin.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS,

THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 50 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 75 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Regent Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen. These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in sizes to Numbers 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 respectively.

TRESAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Regent Pen, and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridescent Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate sizes only: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted to the vest pocket; No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7, and made only of fine quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 2 Pen, 2d quality.
For $1 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.
For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.
For $1 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.
For $1 75 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.
For $2 25 a No. 6 Pen: $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 a No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 2 Pen, 2d quality.
For $1 75 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.
For $2 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.
For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.
For $3 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.
For $3 50 a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK-HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 50 a No. 7 Pen.
For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridescent Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which will mar the closest scrutiny on detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1868.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true considerations) any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he hopes leave to say that, previous to establishing his Steel and Patented Machinery, he could not have made as Good Writing and Durable Pens, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer when writing to order.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents (charge for registering,) in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guarantee their safe delivery.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $12, of 15 per cent. on $36, and of 20 per cent. on $60, if sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,

Any party wishing to compete for the above, and desiring further information, may address the undersigned. Each person writing and publishing a notice as above, will mail a marked copy of the paper containing the notice to me, and also write me by mail, giving full address.

The Premiums will be awarded on the 4th day of July, 1864.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64 to 74 Washington-st., New-York.

NEW-HAVEN, CONN., Oct. 22, 1868.

To B. T. BABBITT:

SIR: Observing your Premium advertisement in the Scientific American, I constituted to state, in a few words, what I know of the merits of your soap, having used it enough to conscientiously say that it is all that it is represented to be.

I wish to ask yourself if it is necessary to write my name in full under the article, should I put it in one of the New-Haven papers.

If the article, which is on the next page is of no account, please say so, and that will end the matter; if it is acceptable, it will appear in the paper immediately.

BREV.-C.-G. D. H. WINTON,
Deputy Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.

CHIEF QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON DEPOT, Nov. 17, 1863.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at the office of Capt. G. H. Tompkins, A. Q. M., U. S. A., at the corner of 3d and G-sts., in this city, until Monday, Dec. 21, 1863, at 12 o'clock M., for the sale of all the manure now on hand, and that may be produced at stables and corrals of this Depot within the next twelve months succeeding the date of the issuing of the contract.

The manure will be awarded to the highest bidder or bidders who will be required to take it away at his or their own expense. The quantity now on hand to be taken away within six months from the date of contract, and that which may accumulate, within six months from the date at which it may be produced.

Bids must be made at so much per cubic yard.

Bids will be received for the quantity on hand, and the subsequent product at each stable and corral, separately, or for the whole together.

No bid is made in the name of a firm, the names of all the parties must appear, or it will be considered as the individual proposal of the party signing it.

The full name and post-office address of the bidder must appear in the proposal.

Proposals must be addressed to Capt. C. H. Tompkins, A. Q. M., U. S. A., Washington, D. C., and should be plainly marked "Proposals for Manure."

Payment will be required to be made in Government funds, at the end of each month, for the manure removed during the month.

An oath of allegiance will be required from each successful bidder.

Good and sufficient bonds in the sum of ($1,000) one thousand dollars, will be required of each successful bidder for the faithful performance of his contract.

The Quartermaster reserves the right to reject all bids that may be deemed to the interest of Government not to accept.

D. H. RUCKER,
Brigadier-General and Chief Quartermaster,
Depot Washington.

Stocks and Bonds bought and sold at the Brokers' Board on commission. Mercantile collections made on all points in the United States and Canada.

NOTICE.

To the Stockholders of the New-York and Harlem Railroad Company:

The increasing business of the Company and anticipated connections with other Railroads render it expedient further to extend the double track from its present terminus at Williams Bridge to Chatham Four Corners, and to complete the road from that place through to Albany.

For the purpose of raising the necessary dollars attending such commencement, and to defray the expense incident to the extensions of the City Railroad already authorized, the Board of Directors have resolved that it is expedient to increase the Capital Stock to such amount, not exceeding the limitation of the Charter, as may be sanctioned by the requisite vote of the Stockholders, and to issue the increased shares from time to time as may be required for the purpose of completing such double track and extensions and procuring the necessary additional rolling stock.

The amount of the Capital Stock, as fixed by the charter and amendatory acts, and included both the Common and Preferred Stocks, eight millions of dollars, of which two millions one hundred and thirty-nine thousand also hundred and fifty dollars remained unissued.

The Board of Directors propose that the Capital Stock be increased to the full amount.

A meeting of the Stockholders for the purpose of acting upon such resolution of the Board of Directors and of conferring in the increase of the Capital Stock to the full amount authorized by the Charter and the several acts of the Legislature, amendatory thereof, will be held at the Office of the Company, at the corner of 26th-st. and 4th-av., on TUESDAY, the first day of December next, at 12 o'clock noon of that day.

For the purpose of ascertaining the Stockholders who shall be entitled to vote at such meeting, books of Transfer will be closed, at 3 o'clock P. M., on Saturday, the 7th day of November inst., the day of the first publication of this notice.

The Books will be open on Tuesday, the 24th day of November.

Dated, New-York, Nov. 4, 1863.

By order of the Board of Directors,

C. VANDERBILT, President.

WM. H. EMERSON, Secretary.

NOTICE.

The undersigned, Commissioners selected at a meeting held at Albany, on the twenty-first day of October last, for the purpose of receiving subscriptions to the capital stock of a National Bank, with a capital of $5,000,000, hereby give notice that the books of subscription to the capital stock of said Bank will be opened on MONDAY, the 23d day of November inst., at the office of the United States Trust Company, No. 46 Wall-st., in this City, and remain open during the ordinary hours of each day until the 1st day of December, inclusive.

Five per centum of the amount of each subscription will be required to be paid at the time of subscribing, and the balance in installments as may be called for by the Directors, in accordance with the act of Congress which requires that the capital stock of said Bank be paid in before the Bank commences business, and the remainder in installments of ten per centum every two succeeding months thereafter.

AUCTION SALES.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S SALE.

In the Circuit Court of the United States, District of Indiana, November Term, 1863.

Robert L. Cutting, vs. the President and Directors of the Peru and Indianapolis Railroad Company, et al.

NOTICE is hereby given, that on the 16th day of January, A. D. 1864, between the hours of one and six in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon of said day, at the Court-house, in the city of Indianapolis, County of Marion, and State of Indiana, the undersigned, the Marshal of the United States of the District aforesaid, by virtue of a certified copy of the decree rendered and made by the Court in the above entitled cause, filed in the Clerk of said Court, will sell at auction, to the public outcry, the following described property and rights of the said Peru and Indianapolis Railroad Company, to wit:

The Peru and Indianapolis Railroad, running and extending from Peru, in the County of Miami, and State of Indiana, through the Counties of Miami, Howard, Tipton, Hamilton and Marion, to the City of Indianapolis, in said County of Marion; and all and singular the land and real estate of which the said Railroad Company was, on the 5th day of March, 1854, or now is seized or possessed, together with all the land under and on the said line of the track, to the whole width and extent that the said Company was or is entitled to take and hold the same; together with the superstructure, fencing and rails thereon and the bridges, viaducts, fences, depot grounds, and buildings of the said Company, and also all the machinery, and all the general property, rights thereto or appertaining of the said Company, and also all that certain piece of land extending from the termination of the said Railroad at Peru to the Lake Erie, Wabash and St. Louis Railroad, acquired or to be acquired by said Company, and the road built or to be built thereon, with the superstructure and rails placed, or to be placed thereon, and all the depot grounds acquired or to be acquired, and all other property, real or personal, acquired or to be acquired by said Company; and also all the tolls, rents and profits to be had or accrued from the said Railroad extending from Peru to Indianapolis and the extension thereof to the Lake Erie, Wabash and St. Louis Railroad, now called the Toledo, Wabash Railway Company, and all franchises, rights, and privileges of the said Peru and Indianapolis Railroad Company, of in, or concerning the same and any and every part thereof.

The above and foregoing will be sold in first-class form for sale, and, upon failing to realize a sufficient sum to satisfy the demand due upon said decree, I will, at the same time and place, in the manner offer for sale the fee simple of the property, effects, rights and franchises of the said Peru and Indianapolis Railroad Company in the above entitled suit.

The sale will be made without relief from the valuation and appraisement laws of the State of Indiana; and said property, the whole or in part, at an enforcement inchoate in the prior and paramount lien of the decree of foreclosure of mortgage executed by said Company on the 1st day of July, 1853, to James Winslow, as Trustee, to secure the payment of the bonds of the Company, amounting to $600,000, and interest thereon, which interest, unpaid on the 1st day of July last, amounts to $68,181 18, and also subject to the rights and liens of the parties to the decree rendered in the Marion and Indianapolis Railroad Company against said Peru and Indianapolis Railroad Company, in the Fall of 1858, in the Circuit Court of Marion County, Indiana, for $37,821, and which judgment has been assigned to Francis B. Cutting. The purchase money must be paid at the time the property is struck down, and upon default the property will be again offered and sold, the purchaser so failing to pay being responsible for any loss upon the reoffering.

The Demolished School of Art.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Permit an indignant artist to call your attention to the following paragraphs quoted from a critical notice upon the "Artists' Fund Exhibition," published in your issue of the 21st inst. The article is descriptive of Leverett's celebrated picture of the "Departure of Columbus from Spain," which he characterizes as a "large, ambitious, pretentious and clever picture, painted with a certain picturesque power, facility of handling, parade of costume and superabundance of coloring, all pleasing and taking enough; but he adds:

"It is unfortunately the thousandth display, quickly tucked out of the memories of that successful Dusseldorf museum of (so called) historical objects, a collection of gaudrics humorous which constitutes a large part of the stock in trade of that smart school of art. Here is a crowd of figures with elaborate costumes, neat elaborately painted, stuff of every texture and pattern, plastic, layered, and accordingly all engaged in the thoroughly fashioned display of costume. Consequently youth, hair in elementary formlessness, consistency to one of those pretenses in the white birth which in the corner of the haberdasher of a certain school of American painters, spoils his appearance also. They are human beings but they are secondary. No one individual center emotion. Columbus, an utterly unexpressive and representation figure, stands conspicuously near a door, almost as like as the ship in which he is to go across an unknown ocean. Trouble has already begun. The boatmen, rather above the call one would hear from their number. It is all positive, meaningless, and commonplace. Good show, polished goodness and pleasing color. The hands for a Dusseldorf painter is always nearly the same. The subject is a large one, and commanding with a great sweep of time
